39038/B

OCKLEY, Simon
History of the Saracens.
1757.

25417

25417

INTRODUCTION.

DESIGNING to communicate to the World Part at leaſt of the hitherto very imperfect Hiſtory of the vaſt Empire of the Saracens, which like a Deluge overwhelmed at once both the Eaſtern and Weſtern Part of the World; we could think of no Method ſo proper as the having recourſe to the moſt Authentick and Celebrated Authors of that Warlike Nation. Accordingly, about Nine Years ago we preſented the World with Three Lives of the immediate Succeſſors of Mahomet, collected with all the Diligence and Accuracy that the Opportunities indulged us at that time would admit: Which hearty Endeavour of ours to enlarge the borders of Hiſtory, according to the beſt of our Ability, hath met with ſuch Approbation from Perſons of diſtinguiſhed Taſte and Learning both at Home and Abroad, that we were reſolved not to omit the firſt Opportunity of proceeding in our Undertaking.

In our firſt Volume we have given an Account of the wonderful Succeſs of the Saracens in the ſpeedy Conqueſt of Syria, Perſia, and Ægypt: The Particulars of the Sieges of Damaſcus, Alexandria, Aleppo, Antioch, Jeruſalem, and ſeveral other Places of great Importance, as delivered by their own Authors: The Foundation of the Deſtruction of the Grecian Empire, and the Eſtabliſhment of that of the Saracens under the Government of Abubeker, Omar, and Othman, the immediate Succeſſors of Mahomet.

But the Reader will find himſelf deceived, as well as I was; if he expects in this Second Volume ſuch a particular Account, or, which is more remarkable, almoſt any at all, of their Foreign Conqueſts (unleſs the bare mentioning them may be reckoned as ſuch) as is to be found in the Firſt. When they firſt undertook the Conqueſt of the Univerſe every thing beyond their own Bounds was new to them, and their Atchievements were no leſs matter of Surpriſe to themſelves than to their Neighbours; but afterwards, when they were grown conſiderable enough to quarrel among themſelves, and their Foreign Enemies were removed ſo far from the Center of the Government, that, let their Succeſs prove which way it would, it was not likely to affect the Vitals of the Empire; their Hiſtorians paſs thoſe diſtant Affairs over very tranſiently, and ſeldom deſcend to Particulars, unleſs there happens to be ſomething very remarkable: Not but that there are in ſeveral of their Libraries particular Accounts, from whence a great many Circumſtances might be gathered relating to what concerns Africa, and entire entire Hiſtories of the Conqueſt of Spain: For the Eaſtern Parts of the Perſian Hiſtorians are the beſt.

Inſtead of ſuch Accounts, we are here entertained with a quite different Scene of Affairs: Namely, thoſe terrible ſhocking Diviſions among themſelves concerning the Succeſſion of Ali and his Family; the Abdication of his Son Haſan, and the Death of Hoſein, which have laid ſuch a Foundation of Diſcord between Ali's Followers (amongſt which are the Perſians and ſeveral others) and the Traditioniſts (of which are the Turks, and whoſe Creed we have cauſed to be inſerted) as is never to be reconciled ſo long as Mahometaniſm hath any Being upon the Face of the Earth; though ſome of the Turks interpret that Fable of Mahomet's having divided the Moon and holding one half of it in his Sleeve, which afterwards was joined again to the other, as prefiguring the Diviſion of the Profeſſors of Mahometaniſm (whoſe Standard is the New-Moon) into thoſe two great Sects, and the Reunion of them after a certain Period of Years.

Theſe Things, together with the Changing of their Government, which was left to them Elective by Mahomet, into Hereditary by Moawiyah, and the ſettling all things firmly in the Reigns of his Succeſſors; beſides the extending their Dominions to such a prodigious Greatness, are the principal Contents of this present Volume, wherein we have added Fifty Years to our former History: So that though we have not yet arrived to the Conquest of Spain, nor the Learned Age of the Arabians, yet we are very near the former, and not far from the beginning of the latter; having brought the Saracen Empire to an established Settlement, and written the History (inclusive of the Life of Mahomet) of Fourscore Years, in which the Saracens conquered very much more than the Romans did in Four Hundred.

I designed, when I first set about this Work, to take in the whole Series of the Affairs of the Christians during that Period; but upon second Thoughts it appeared to me to be foreign to my Purpose; for every one may satisfie himself, by reading this History, how regardless they were of any Europæan Powers: It is more than visible that they were wholly taken up in Domestick Quarrels; so that such a Way of proceeding must have occasioned a great many Discourses to be intermixed through the whole, in order to reconcile the disagreeing Accounts of the Greeks and Arabians, both as to History and Chronology; whereby the Series of the Arabick History must have been very frequently and very unseasonably interrupted. A Man might as well undertake to write the Hiſtory of France, for the time, out of our News-Papers, as to give an Account of the Arabians from Chriſtian Hiſtorians. Wherefore all that we promiſe is this; we fix our Chronology to a Day: The Arabians, (and it is their Hiſtory we write, and no other) are the moſt likely to give the beſt Account of Things performed among themſelves; and we leave to every one the Liberty of comparing it with any thing done or written in that Time.

as

Then as to the Greeks, whom we have ſeen ſufficiently broken in the former Part of our Hiſtory by the prevailing Arms of the Victorious Saracens, it was not in their Power to do any thing conſiderable. The Saracens had never a Deputy-Lieutenant or General that would not have thought it the greateſt Affront, and ſuch as ought to ſtigmatize him with indelible Diſgrace, if he ſhould have ſuffered himſelf to have been inſulted by the united Forces of all Europe. And if any one aſks, Why the Greeks did not exert themſelves more in order to the Extirpation of theſe inſolent Invaders; it is a ſufficient Anſwer to any Perſon that is acquainted with the Characters of thoſe Men, to ſay that Amrou kept his Reſidence at Alexandria, and Moawiyah at Damaſcus.

But what a great many Perſons, otherwiſe of no contemptible Reading nor Abilities, wonder at, is the vaſt difference between the Occurrences in our preſent Hiſtory and thoſe that are found in others. But whoſoever conſiders the Briſkneſs and Activity of the Arabians (the effect of the warmth of their Climate, Temperance, and conſtant Exerciſe) joined to their Enthuſiaſm, will find an eaſy Solution of thoſe extravagant Actions that ſeem to diſtinguiſh them from the reſt of Mankind.

For this Reaſon no one ought to wonder if I have accommodated my Stile to the Humour of the People concerning whom I write. To write of a Nation in their Circumſtances that were all Humouriſts, Bigots, and Enthuſiaſts, in ſuch a Stile as becomes the Sedateneſs and Gravity of the Greeks and Romans, would be very unſuitable and unnatural. In ſuch a Caſe you put them in a Dreſs which they would no more thank you for, than a Roman Senator would for a long Periwig, or Socrates for a Pair of Silk Stockings. You rob them of all their Merit; thoſe very Things upon the Account of which you laugh at them, they value themſelves moſt upon; and it is moſt certain that the nearer you bring a Man that is ſingular to the reſt of Mankind, the farther you remove him from himſelf, and deſtroy the very Being of his Singularity. This will, I hope, ſatisfie the Judicious Reader (and I am not over-ſollicitous about the reſt) reſt) that I have not deviated from that way of writing which was firſt eſtabliſhed by the Ancients, and always admired and imitated by the wiſeſt of the Moderns, not out of Choice but Neceſſity; otherwiſe I ſhould have abuſed both the Arabians and my Readers: The Arabians, by putting them into a Diſguiſe under a Pretence of dreſſing them; my Readers, by defrauding them of the Humour of that Enthuſiaſtick Nation: So that the more I had affected to have copied any ancient Author, the greater Succeſs I had been crowned with in my Imitation, the farther I muſt have receded from what the Nature of ſuch a Work as this requires, which would have been an unpardonable Fault in an Hiſtorian. Wherefore I have let them tell their own Story their own way, and followed them ſo cloſe that if they themſelves were to ariſe from the dead, they ſhould confeſs that, according to my poor Ability and ſmall Skill in that copious and difficult Language, I had done them Juſtice. It is my Buſineſs to ſet the Matter in a clear Light, the Reader's to Judge. I have therefore abſtained as much as poſſible from intermixing Reflections of my own, unleſs where there appeared a Neceſſity of illuſtrating ſomething that might not be altogether ſo obvious to Perſons unacquainted with Oriental Affairs.

The Ancients, it is true, had an uniform Way of writing; they are content to expreſs the Senſe, but the Manner is ſtill the ſame. In the Hiſtory of Alexander the Great, or the ſecond Punic War, an Indian or a Carthaginian ſpeaks Roman Senſe and Idiom. But it appears by the Pains that the Criticks have taken about that little piece of Punick in Plautus (which is moſt wretchedly corrupted) how glad they would have been to have ſeen a Punick Hiſtorian, who, though relating the ſame Facts, would have been almoſt as different from any thing we have as the Old Teſtament is from Livy. I have endeavoured not only to repreſent the Facts, but to trace the very Expreſſion; to ſet the whole in ſuch a ſtrong and clear Light as it appeared to me in the Original; and in a word to infuſe the Arabick Idiom into the Reader without his being at the Pains of ſtudying it; and ſo much the rather becauſe it ſavours ſo much of the ancient manner of Expreſſion uſed in our Sacred Oracles; ſo that if it be ſometimes a little to the Prejudice of the Engliſh Idiom, I hope it is an Error on the right hand, becauſe I thought it better to omit what every underſtanding Reader could ſupply himſelf withal, than deprive him of what he could not. Whether or no we have in this particular been ſo happy as to fall in with the Reader's Judgment, to which we do by no means pretend to prescribe, this we are assured of, that we have herein observed the Golden Rule, and dealt with our Reader as we would in such a Case be dealt with our selves, who should take it very ill to find all the Genius and Humour of a Nation pared away as superfluous, to make room for the Author's Politeness.

we

Then as to the Particulars. Some of them, I confess, seem very odd and ridiculous; but the more they are so, the more they shew the People concerning whom we write. Besides, there is a vast deal of difference between being a Reader and a Spectator. Those Things amongst them that make us laugh now, would have made us tremble then. The Habit, the Manner, the Gravity, Sobriety, and Activity of that Conquering People, are not beneath the Observance of the greatest Genius. The Reason of our Laughter is the difference of their Manners, which is childish. For this Reason it is that Ignorants laugh at Scholars; Fools at Wise Men; Boys at old Ones; Atheists and Debauchees at Persons of Virtue and Religion. However I do not deny but that I have here and there inserted a Relation wherein the Matter of Fact it self contains nothing very extraordinary; only I would not omit it, because, methinks, the Circumstances are so very expressive of the Humour and Genius of that Tragicomical People.

Who

Who would not rather have omitted the Circumſtances of the Siege of a Town than the [4] manner of Ali's going to be inaugurated? The former a Man may conceive ſome Notion of by himſelf, but none of the latter without good Authority. A great many Cities have been taken with almoſt the ſame Circumſtances, but I believe very few Emperors were ever proclaimed with ſuch as theſe. A great many other little Incidents there are, very uſeful and entertaining in themſelves that may be properly enough inſerted in writing a Life, which would not ſo well come into an univerſal Hiſtory, whoſe Courſe goes on like a vaſt River ſometimes overflowing its Banks, ſometimes keeping within its Bounds: Sometimes with a great impetuous Fall, ſometimes with a ſmooth and almoſt imperceptible Motion: But in writing the Lives of Monarchs the Courſe is frequently interrupted, and ſeveral Things fall in relating to his particular Perſon; His Humour, Friends, Enemies, Paſſions, Affections, Dangers, Deliverances, Apothegms, and the like, not properly belonging to the Hiſtory of the People: Such is the difference between Suetonius and Livy.

But to write after the manner of the moſt celebrated Univerſal Hiſtorians, all little Circumſtances and trivial Diſcourſes muſt be omitted;

[4] Pag. 5.

ted; the Language muſt be all of the ſame thread, and the whole carried on in a ſtrong eloquent flowing Stile; and when the Subject calls for it, (as in any very extraordinary Caſe) proportionable Ornament muſt be added; the Images magnified beyond the Life; and embelliſhed to that degree ſometimes, that the Hiſtorian puts on the Orator before he is aware: Speeches muſt be made ſuitable to every Occaſion according to the Abilities of the Author; the Cadence muſt be ſmooth and eaſy, and the Periods full: Nothing muſt be inſerted that falls beneath the Dignity of Hiſtory; otherwiſe it muſt of Neceſſity oftentimes happen, that a great deal of Nature is loſt. The whole Compoſure muſt be Uniform, and managed as regularly as a well built Edifice: In ſhort, every thing muſt be carried on with ſuch a round turn that the Facts ſhall ſeem to be made on purpoſe to embelliſh the Hiſtory, rather than the Hiſtory for the Relation of the Facts: He that reads for Delight, and loves to be entertained with artful Compoſitions, will chuſe this way; he that ſtudies Nature will be better pleaſed with the other: That is one reaſon why Perſons of the greateſt Severity and exacteſt Judgment delight in Comedy, not only becauſe it diverts them, but becauſe it lets them into the Humour of Mankind, and paints it in all Conditions of Life as it really is. Now why an Hiſtorian, whoſe buſineſs is Truth, ſhould, for the ſake of Imitation, ſmother every thing that is Characteriſtick and diſtinguiſhing of the People concerning whom he writes, I cannot underſtand. Wherefore let Livy make Speeches for his People, and Tacitus invent Politicks, it is the Glory of our Arabick Hiſtorians to repreſent the naked Truth as handed down from their Anceſtors in its native Simplicity. So that as much as we are exceeded by other Authors in their elaborate Expreſſion, and the Strength and Artifice of their Compoſition, ſo much at leaſt do we hope to exceed them in the unaffected Plainneſs and Sincerity of our Relation.

as

But I ſhall tranſgreſs my Bounds before I am aware of it. I forget that I am a Tranſlator, and run the hazard of incurring the Diſpleaſure of a polite ſort of little Criticks, who will take it extremely amiſs if People of our inferior Claſs ſhall preſume to encroach upon their Prerogative, and dare in their Preſence to paſs a Judgment upon Stile or Compoſition. We that ſtudy Languages (the Learned ones I mean, for the other are an Accompliſhment) are always to conſider our ſelves as nailed down to the loweſt Form: And the leaſt Proficiency that way is a ſhrew'd Indication of a Man's want of Senſe, and ſavours rankly of Pedantry. Pedantry! that

Bane

Bane and Poiſon of good Manners and polite Converſation, infinitely preferable to all the Languages and Sciences in the World! And though it is not abſolutely impoſſible in the Nature of the thing it ſelf, and Hiſtory may furniſh us with ſome rare Inſtances wherein the Scholar and the Man of Senſe have been united in the ſame Perſon; yet there are ſo many numerous Examples to the contrary, that ſince the Experience of a nice diſcerning Age hath adjudged ſuch an application ſcandalous, a wiſe Man would take care (as in all other Criminal Caſes, however he might be ſecretly inclined) to avoid the leaſt Suſpicion of it for the ſake of his Reputation: But as for us, that have unhappily fallen into it, and preferred the Sound of Words to good Senſe; we ought to acquieſce in our Choice, and ſit down contented with our Lot: It is a Miſery of our own chooſing, and there is nothing left for our deareſt Friends, but only to bewail us, ſince it is irrecoverably out of their Power to aſſiſt us. Let this be our Conſolation, that we are capable of meriting the Protection of ſuch Great Men, even at the Expence of any Servitude! We are the Hewers of Wood and Drawers of Water to the Congregation of our Learned Iſrael! But though they uſe us like Gibeonites, yet we are in Reality Iſraelites, and can prove our Deſcent better than any of them all:

all: We are of the Tribe of Iſſachar, Aſſes couching down between Two Burthens, viz. Of our own Studies and Labours on the one ſide, and an impertinent vexatious World on the other. It is our Buſineſs to crack the Shell, and their Privilege to eat the Kernel; And as great Architects only deſign or paſs a Judgment upon a Building, and leave the Sawing, and Cutting of Stone, and removing the Rubbiſh, to inferior Mechanicks; ſo our great Maſters imploy that ſervile Part of Mankind, whoſe Capacities qualify them for nothing elſe, in the Search of Languages.

As for their own Parts, they determine in all Caſes by dint of Superior Genius; judge from the Nature of the Things themſelves, without being impoſed upon by the Sounds of Words, and leave thoſe Two Crutches of Ancient and Modern Learning, to thoſe poor Wretches who are not able to crawl along without them. The Abſence of far fetched and dear bought Learning, is abundantly ſupplied in them by a Redundancy of Senſe and Underſtanding: The due, or even undue Mixture, in their common Converſation of ſuch Words as Experience, Knowledge of Mankind, Underſtanding the World, Underſtanding THINGS not WORDS: Reading MEN inſtead of Reading BOOKS, and above all, a Taſte, ſets them at once upon the Heads of all the Learned, Learned, whether Ancient or Modern: And ſince I have mentioned a Taſte, I remember in the Life of the famous Father Paul written by Father Fulgentio, who was intimately acquainted with his Converſation, he ſays that he had ſuch an exquiſite Taſte that he could immediately diſtinguiſh all the Ingredients of a Sawce or a Medicine. But this the Father attributes to his ſingular Abſtinence and the very rare Uſe of either. Theſe Gentlemens Taſte I take to be very much of the ſame Nature.

They were pleaſed to object againſt my Firſt Volume (I hope they will prove ſomething more merciful to this poor Second) that it was the ſtrangeſt Story that ever they heard ſince they were born! They never met with ſuch Folks in their Lives as theſe Arabians! That they never heard of this Account before, which certainly they muſt have done of courſe if any body elſe had! A Reverend Dignitary asked me, If when I wrote that Book I had not lately been reading the Hiſtory of Oliver Cromwell! They ſay that the Arabians are given to Romance, and, I ſuppoſe, for that Reaſon not to be believed (according to Ariſtotle) when they ſpeak true: And above all, that a Hiſtory will never go down in this nice Age that contains only a Relation of Battels, but that the very Quinteſſence of a Hiſtory conſiſts in the Politicks.

Now

Now I muſt confeſs for my own part, that I am of ſuch an indolent Diſpoſition, that if I can but fairly get rid of this laſt grand Objection, I care not one Ruſh for all the reſt. I confeſs that a Hiſtory without Politicks comes into the World in very unfaſhionable Circumſtances; eſpecially in a Generation wherein, if Fortune had not envied our Merit, we ſhould all have been Plenipotentiaries, Secretaries of State, or Privy-Counſellors! What affects me moſt is, that this Objection ſhould be made by theſe Polite Gentlemen, whom every body would have ſuppoſed to have been ſo well ſkilled in Analyticks, as upon the firſt ſight of any Action to have made an infallible Gueſs at the Springs of it. Beſides, I ſhould have run a Riſque on the other ſide, for it is an inſufferable Affront for an Author to leave nothing to his Intelligent Reader, but be always feeding him with a Spoon, and teaching him to read with a Feſcue! Who would once have imagined but that it was the peculiar Talent of theſe Gentlemen, upon firſt ſight of the Event to trace back the Springs of the Action; at leaſt to have a near Gueſs in an Enthuſiaſtick Tyrannical Government, ſupported by Perſons entangled in Family Quarrels entailed upon them from Generation to Generation, and not extinguiſhed, whatſoever they pretended, by their being united in the ſame Profeſſion of

Ma-

Mahometaniſm: From which Antecedent Diviſions aroſe thoſe terrible Convulſions in the State, that had it not been very well ſupported by their Averſion to Chriſtianity on the one ſide, and to Idolatry on the other, they muſt of courſe have become a Prey to their common Enemies. Add to this, that thoſe Perſons who were indulged the greateſt ſhare of their Prophet's Favour when alive, were treated with proportionable Reſpect after his Deceaſe: To that Degree that if any Perſon had been any way familiar with Mahomet, he was reckoned one of the Companions, [3] though he was never ſo young, and there was ſuch Reſpect paid to them as would have turned the Scale in almoſt any Debate; for they would go to a very great Extremity rather than the Authority of the Companion of the Apoſtle ſhould have been rejected: I mean if that Authority had been urged on the prevailing Side; for notwithſtanding their Allegiance to their Prince, it is evident they were no Bigots to indefeaſible Right.

But if the not having heard of this Hiſtory before be ſuch a terrible Objection againſt it, what would the having heard of it before have been? I muſt confeſs that Objection lies ſtrong againſt the Veracity of it to Perſons who would take it as an Affront to be ſuppoſed capable of being ignorant of ſuch a Conſiderable part of Hiſtory as this pretends to be, if we could once induce our Selves to believe that there could be any Truth in it. What I wonder moſt at is that thoſe very Gentlemen who were formerly acquainted with the Rivers Jaxartes and Oxus, Indus and the Ganges better than with the Thames it ſelf which they ſwam in every Holiday; that diſcourſed of Aſia as if they had been Surveyors to Alexander the Great; that would have diſputed every foot of Ancient Geography with no leſs eagerneſs than if it had been a Paternal Inheritance; and could pronounce concerning the Oracle of Jupiter Ammon with no leſs Certainty than the Oracle it ſelf; ſhould on a ſudden prove ſo indolent as not only to ſuffer thoſe delicate Provinces to be raviſhed out of their Hands without ſo much as venturing a Suit at Law about them, but even expreſs an ungrateful Diſpleaſure againſt thoſe who too officiouſly proffer their Service to reſtore them Gratis. However theſe Criticks are of the kinder ſort, they neither mean nor do any great Hurt; they only make themſelves a little Sport with thoſe Things which they do not ſo well underſtand; and if they carry on the Humour upon that Foot, bid fair for the Reputation of the merrieſt Company in the World. Great pity it is to ſpoil good Humour. But there is another ſort of a more Peſtilent and Malignant Nature, who magnifie the Memories of Buxtorf, Bochart, Pocock and all the reſt of our Heroes in that kind of Learning that they ever heard of, with no leſs Hypocritical Inſolence than the Phariſees in our Saviour's time repaired the Sepulchres of the Ancient Prophets, whilſt they were equally diſtant from once endeavouring to copy after their Example, as they were from ſuffering thoſe in their own Age to be at quiet that did. Theſe I deliver up to the care of Miguel de Luna a Spaniſh Phyſician, who hath left them this Receipt: [3] Y a los detractores reſpondo que antes que comincien a Detractar tomen la pluma en la mano y hagan otro tanto, y con buena experiencia veran muy a la clara quanto mas facil es dezir mal q̃ eſcrivir libros para aprovechar a los virtuoſos que tienen Chriſtianidad y buena Conſciencia. That is, And I give this anſwer to the Detractors, that before they begin to detract let them take Pen in Hand and do ſo much more, and they will ſee very clearly by good Experience how much eaſier it is to ſpeak ill than to write Books for the Service of thoſe virtuous Perſons who hold Chriſtianity and a good Conſcience.

[3] Ziyàd was of this Number: He was born in the Year of the Hegirah, and was but Eleven Years old when Mahomet died. See P. 156.

[3] Prohemio de la Verdadera Hiſtoria Del Rey don Rodrigo: por Tarif Abentarique, Traduzido de la lengua Arabiga por Miguel de Luna. P. 3.

Now since I have mentioned Miguel de Luna, I cannot help falling in with a Suspicion of [4] Monsieur Chevreau's concerning him, who is apt to think that he made that Book of the Loss of Spain, which he pretended to Translate out of Arabick. He says indeed that it is in the King of Spain's Library. There may be a Book written by Tarif Abentarique concerning the Conquest of Spain; but then I am as certain as it is possible for a Man to be in a case of that Nature, that De Luna's Book is no Translation of it. I have looked but little into it indeed, but every Page confirmed me in my Suspicion long before I saw Chevreau's Remark. He talks of Caliphs there which we do not find in our Asiatick Historians, and of sending for orders to them into Arabia, whereas their constant Residence was at Damascus; and never came near Arabia upon any occasion whatsoever so long as the House of Ommiyah reigned, unless when they went on Pilgrimage to Meccah. Beside, the Letters in that Book are such as were never written by any Arabian in this World: Every Line of them plainly speak them to be his own; and I can never be induced to think otherwise, unless I should be convinced to the contrary by some learned Person who had seen the Original, or had an Opportunity of perusing it my Self.

[4] Chevreau's History of the World, Vol. 3. Book 6. Chap. 1.

It is plain from the 47th Page of our preſent Hiſtory that when Moawiyah was reſolved to ſtand it out in oppoſition to Ali he wrote a Letter to Amrou to come to his Aſſiſtance: ſuch an Hiſtorian would not have ſcrupled to have made one for him, ſuppoſe as follows.

Moawiyah to Amrou.

SUrely I am much miſtaken in my Opinion of your Senſe, Courage and Zeal for the Religion, if your private Retirement in Paleſtine ſhould have ſo far chagrined or enervated you, as not ſtill to retain the Memory of the paſt Sufferings of our Friends, or to remain unconcerned at their preſent Afflictions. The houſe of Haſhem inſults us; Ali and his Party bid us Defiance. Though you indeed have no ſuch particular Obligation to Othman, yet now there is a fair Opportunity of being revenged upon our Common Enemies. Ali hath the Irakians and ſome of the Arabian Tribes engaged in his Intereſt, but what are they compared to our Victorious Troops that have in ſo ſhort a time broken the force of the Grecians, a Nation always exerciſed in War, not only againſt their Borderers, North and Weſt, but againſt the Perſians. Beſides it is not to be doubted but ſome Expedient may be found out to ſow ſuch a Diviſion amongſt Ali's Partiſans, as may turn to a very good Account; for it is not now a Diſpute about Religion but Juſtice. We call for Vengeance for the Blood of Othman; enough will aſſiſt us under that Pretence, without having any regard to the Merits of our Controverſy. The Perfidiouſneſs of the Chaldeans and Babylonians is ſo notoriouſly known, that even Ali himſelf were he to ſpeak out, would confeſs that they were much more likely to attend the Succeſs of any Perſon in whoſe Intereſt they pretended to engage, than to run any riſque in his Service. Beſides your own Egypt wants you; Egypt ſo gloriouſly wreſted out of the Hands of the Grecian Dog by your Victorious Arms. That ſhall be yours if we ſucceed; and if you give us your Aſſiſtance there is no apparent Reaſon to fear, if it pleaſe God.

Now ſuppoſe any one in my Place had taken this Method of writing Hiſtory, he could not have failed of Materials, provided he had Judgment enough to diſtinguiſh them, to have made whatſoever he had pleaſed of it, without once telling a poſitive Lye, or deviating from the real Truth of the Matter of Fact; unleſs this may be called ſo, to write a Letter that never was written, but which, if it had, would have been ſuitable to the Occaſion. Now I grant that the fineſt and niceſt of the Modern Judges, founding their Opinion upon the Practice of the moſt celebrated Ancients, do allow an Hiſtorian that Li-

Liberty, provided it be done discreetly, to compose Speeches, and insert Prudent Admonitions, provided nothing be done against Decorum, nor prejudicial to the Truth of the History. Let us hear the Judgment of the inimitable Fracastorius speaking in the Person of Naugerius.

The other Gentleman in the Dialogue enquiring how much Ornament the Orator would allow to an Historian that stood in need of the Assistance of his Art, Naugerius answers,[1] "That "since what he, [the Historian] proposes, is to "write Matters of Fact for the prudent Conduct "of Human Life; it is sufficient to answer this "End if he uses a proper, clean, grave, and just "manner of speaking, which shall not always be "destitute of its Harmony neither. He may be al- "lowed sometimes to feign Speeches, and give "Advice, in order to instill the more Wisdom; "which I have according to the best of my Ability "attempted to perform in my Books of the History

[1] Quoniam igitur finis ejus est gesta scribere ad Prudentiam, quantum quidem ad hoc pertinet, sat illi factum erit si propria, si candida, si gravi, ac vera Oratione utatur; cui interdum nec sua desit Musica. Licebit & interdum ut effingat conciones & nonnulla consilia ut Prudentiam majorem doceat; quod nos quoque in nostris Historiarum libris de rebus Venetis, quantum in nobis fuit C. Cæsarem & Polybium gravem Authorem secuti præstare conati sumus, verum ita licebit ut gravitatis historiæ & veritatis nihil detraxerit, reliquas vero pulchritudines illi negabit. Fracastorii Naugerius sive de Poetica, p. 345.

" of Venice, led by the Example of Cæsar and " Polybius a grave Author. But he must only be " permitted to do it so far as may be consistent " with the Gravity of the History and the Truth; " all other Ornaments he will deny him. But,

Nobis non licet esse tam disertis.

I have not indulged my self this allowed Liberty, though I could have screened my self under the Patronage of these great Authorities. How I have dealt by my Historians I must leave to the Determination of those Learned Persons who either are at present or hereafter shall be both able and willing to compare my Book with the Originals from whence it was taken. It is to you, Gentlemen, that I appeal, by whose Judgment I must stand or fall. Whilst some will have it a meer Translation, though there be as much Difference as there is between Wheat in the Ear and Bread upon the Table; others, to be so much my own as hardly to have any Foot-step in the Original; you only can judge how far it is a Translation; how far embellished: With what Judgment the Circumstances I have inserted were chosen, and those I have omitted left out: You can see where I went streight, and where I stumbled: Where I dashed my Foot against a Rock every step I set, and where I galloped pleasantly over the Plain: In a word, you are the only Judges of the difficulties I went through, through, and the moſt competent ones of the Merits of the whole Performance. But before I take my leave it is neceſſary that I advertiſe you concerning ſome few things, both for the Juſtification of my ſelf, and the ſaving you ſome trouble in your Examination. One Favour that I beg at your hands is, that you do not paſs a Judgment upon my Book, till you have compared it with the very ſame Manuſcripts that I made uſe of. Becauſe though I hope there are not a great many Miſtakes, yet there might poſſibly have been fewer, If I had either been furniſhed with better Copies, or two Copies of the ſame Book. You know what it is to read (or rather not to read) without the Diacritical Points, (which though you are ſenſible, every one elſe is not, are not the Vowels but little Pricks by which the Letters in the Alphabet are a great many of them diſtinguiſhed one from the other) and how much a more difficult taſk we have with our Arabick in ſuch a caſe than Plutarch had with his Latin which he underſtood only by the Senſe. He knew the Hiſtory or Subject before, and could not fail of the true Reading of the Words; we come deſtitute of both to our Manuſcripts, and are almoſt forced to conjure both for Words and Meaning. Let us hear the Learned Golius his juſt Apology, that he makes for the Faults committed by the Famous Erpenius in his Tranſlation of Elmakin. Theſe are his Words, [3] " For though this Manu- " ſcript was written in Ægypt, yet the Negli- " gence of the over-haſty Tranſcriber had moſt " abominably deformed it; eſpecially by leaving " out the Orthographical Points. The Commiſſion " of which Fault, eſpecially in Verſe and proper " Names, it can hardly be expreſſed how it puts " every thing out of Joynt, and throws all into " Confuſion, ſo that He was obliged oftentimes to " act the part of a Diviner before he could perform " that of an Interpreter." Theſe Difficulties ariſing from the Nature of the Language, joyned to a bad Hand and a ſingle Copy, make things that would otherwiſe be plain inſuperably obſcure; and have oftentimes occaſioned the Omiſſion of Paſſages that would have been no inconſiderable Embelliſhment to our Hiſtory.

Famous

Nor muſt it be diſſembled, without the greateſt Arrogance, that all the Blame is not to be laid upon the Copies. It would be the height of Impudence for a Man to ſay that the Reaſon

[3] Nam licet Niloticus hunc Codicem Calamus exaraverit, nimium tamen feſtinantis incuria eundem peſſime deformârat, crebrâ imprimis omiſſione Orthographicæ punctationis: quod quidem vitium in metris præſertim & Propriis Nominibus commiſſum dici daud poteſt quam omnia luxet & incerta reddat: ita ut ſæpenumerò vatem priùs agere debuerit quam interpretem poſſit. Golius, Præfat. ad Erpenii Hiſtor. Saracen. Arab. Lat. Fol.

why

why he did not insert such or such a Passage, was because he did not judge it proper, when he must be conscious at the same time that the only true Reason was because he did not understand it. I do frankly confess that there are several things that I could have given a satisfactory Account of both to my self and the Reader, which I have omitted upon the account of two or three obscure Expressions. How it may fare with those Persons that have travelled the East, I am not so competent a Judge, though I have reason to think that even the best of them encounter their Difficulties: But this I dare answer for, that all that hath yet been communicated to us in Europe is not sufficient to furnish us with what we call a competent Skill in any other Language. What pity it was that the Importunity of those perverse Times that thought every Minute of Study lost that was not employed in their insipid way of Application to Theology, should rob us of so much of the Life of our great Doctor Pocock, who could have unlocked to us the Treasuries of the East! Whilst he, good Man! out of Compliance to a stupid Generation, was reading over and comparing tedious Commentators! How much more would his Oriental Learning, so far as it relates to the Holy Scriptures, have shined by it self in such Discourses as his incomparable Notes upon his

Porta

Porta Moſis, to which we have ſeen nothing equal ſince the Reſtauration of Oriental Learning!

How would the Candidates of Oriental Studies have rejoiced to ſee him publiſh his Meidánis Proverbs now in the Bodleian Library, to the number of Six Thouſand: Tranſcribed and Tranſlated by his own Hand; and which he deſired, as appears by what he hath written in the firſt Page, dated Anno 1637, That if he did not return from his ſecond Journey into the Eaſt, ſhould be publiſhed by the Learned Mr. Thomas Gravius!

What is it that ſo good natural Parts, ſuch indefatigable Induſtry, bleſſed with thoſe excellent Opportunities, and ſo long a Life (for I think he exceeded ninety) could not have helpt us to? What the Eraſmus's, the Budæus's, Stephens's, Scaliger's and Caſaubon's have been to us in Greek, the ſame would he have been in Arabick, nay and ſo much more as the Difference is between living Cuſtoms and Languages, and dead ones. His Maſter in the Eaſt, (to the Mufti's Credit be it ſpoken) having diſmiſſed him with this Compliment, Go thy ways, whereſoever thou goeſt thou art Maſter of more Arabick than the Mufti of Aleppo!

But our good Friend Mr. Selden was pleaſed to rob us of another conſiderable Part of his

Time

Time in laying an [7] Obligation upon him to tranſlate Eutychius his Annals, purely to gratify his own Vanity; becauſe that was the Author he had unhappily pitched upon, from whom to raiſe an Argument of the Equality of Biſhops and Preſbyters from the Foundation of the Church of Alexandria, the firſt Patriarch of which was it ſeems a Cobler ordained by St. Mark, to whom were joined Twelve more Preſbyters (no doubt the firſt Converts that the Apoſtle made) out of whom was to be choſen a ſucceeding Patriarch upon the Demiſe of the Cobler.

Now purely for the ſake of this Sneer upon our Eſtabliſhed Epiſcopal Church and Clergy, did this great Scholar and Patron of Learning (whom, if we had any Gall, we have more reaſon ſtill to hate than deſpiſe) employ ſo much of this Learned Man's Time about the tranſlating a Book in it ſelf good for little or nothing; and which, if it had been never ſo good, ought to have been publiſhed only in the Original, becauſe of the Eaſineſs of the Language.

I know, Gentlemen, that you do not think this a Digreſſion, for you are very well appriſed

[7] Dr. Pocock in the Title Page calls him Choragus, which was interpreted by ſome, as if the meaning of it had been becauſe Mr. Selden had tranſlated the beginning of it firſt (though with very bad Succeſs.) But the Truth of it is, that Mr. Selden was at the Charges of it. If I be not miſtaken, I had that Information from one of Ravins's Epiſtles, who was better acquainted with the Circumſtances.

that

that all this while I am only bewailing the want of thoſe Helps that ſhould have made not only our preſent Hiſtory, but all our future Undertakings more compleat, and juſtly complaining of thoſe that have robbed us of them. Give me Leave to ſhed one Tear upon the Tomb of that eminent Perſon (whom, if Dr. Pocock himſelf was alive, he would allow to be the only one qualified both by his Age, Inclination, Capacity, Learning and plentiful Circumſtances, to receive from his Hand that ſhining Lamp that he had held to us before;) the Glory of our Britiſh Iſlands, the incomparable Mr. Guiſe of All-Souls College in Oxford; extinguiſhed in the Flower of his Youth; excellent in all manner of Learning, Oriental eſpecially, whoſe Memory I never recollect, nor whoſe Interpretations of nice Paſſages of the Arabick Authors, eſpecially Poets, which frequently occur in ſome of Dr. Huntington's Manuſcripts, I never read without the greateſt Concern. But,

> [2] Si largitate ſumptibuſque funerum
> Mœror levari poſſet, et Manes pios
> Hilum juvarent lachrymæ viventium:
> Utroque grati fungeremur munere,
> Cœloque moles æqua ſurgeret, gravem
> Teſtata curam, nec modus fletu foret.

[2] Baudii Epiſt. LXXIV. Centuria I.

Sed

Sed copiis luxuque vesano nihil
Sedatur imo pectori infixus dolor.
Nec fas piumque flere felices, quibus
Æterna vita luce functis obtigit.

Could costly Funerals mitigate our Grief,
Or give departed Souls the least Relief;
Nought should be wanting; Tears should swell our Eyes;
To Heaven it self the Monument should rise,
Witness of our Concern: No Term of Years
Should stop the Current of our flowing Tears.
But Cost and vain Expence can't ease our Pains, Deep in our Breast the stubborn Grief remains.
Nor is it Reason to lament the Blest,
Who, fled from hence, enjoy Eternal Rest.

The Sorrow of those that survive will neither administer Consolation, nor repair our Loss. But if the most disconsolate Mothers receive Comfort after the Loss of their dearest Firstborn upon the Prospect of a fresh Offspring; we have no reason to despair but if some few of those many flourishing Genius's, with which both our Universities abound, were trained up to those Studies with due Encouragement; some to cultivate them at home; others to be sent abroad, we might restore the Glory of Oriental Learning to our British Islands (wherein to my certain Knowledge we have never yet been exceeded ed abroad) and make our ſelves amends, at leaſt in a great meaſure, for the Loſs of thoſe worthy Perſons whom we ſo juſtly, ſo ſincerely bewail.

But this we leave to the Wiſdom of our Superiors: I could not paſs by theſe Great Men without paying them this due Reſpect; now I return to my Apology.

I have not been wanting to my ſelf in making uſe of the Learned Labours of Monſieur D'Herbelot; whoſe Bibliotheque Orientale deſerves the higheſt Eſteem from all that have any true Taſte of Oriental Learning. After I had made my Collections I found him ſo accurate in the Life of Ali, (as there was good reaſon, he being the moſt conſiderable Perſon by much next to Mahomet) that I choſe rather ſometimes to tranſcribe him Paragraph by Paragraph, than to make what was well done before worſe, by affecting to make it my own.

To him I owe whatſoever is quoted from the Perſian Authors. How often have I endeavoured to perfect my ſelf in that eaſy and delicate Language, but my malignant and envious Stars ſtill fruſtrated my Attempts; but they ſhall ſooner alter their Courſes than extinguiſh my Reſolution of quenching that Thirſt which the little Taſte I have had of it, hath already excited.

I am as yet deſtitute of Turkiſh; which I ſhould not be ſo much concerned at, were it not for five Volumes in that Language in our Publick Library, which I behold with Delight and Concern at the ſame time: With Delight, becauſe they are ours, and ſo not to be deſpaired of: With Concern, becauſe I do not underſtand them. They are a Tranſlation of the great Tábari, who is the Livy of the Arabians; the very Parent of their Hiſtory, and as far as I could find by Enquiry given over for loſt in Arabick. I formerly enquired of my Predeceſſor Dr. Luke concerning him, who ſaid he had never met with him in the Eaſt, and that he was to be deſpaired of in Arabick: Monſieur D'Herbelot ſays the ſame. And there is this good Reaſon of it, that this being the Standard of their Hiſtory, and upon that account at firſt tranſlated out of Arabick into Turkiſh, the Value of the Arabick Copy muſt of neceſſity ſink by Degrees in all thoſe Territories where Turkiſh is better underſtood than Arabick; for it would not be worth the Bookſeller's while to be at the Charge of tranſcribing it. However that we may not imagine it loſt becauſe of its Scarcity, I luckily found a Piece of it in Folio amongſt Archbiſhop Laud's Manuſcripts (pity it is imperfect) accurately written with all the Points, and no doubt for the uſe of ſome great Perſon, without the Aſſiſtance of which Copy I must oftentimes have been left in the Dark.

But had I not been destitute of these Assistances; had I not been forced to snatch every thing that I have as it were out of the Fire; our Saracen History should have been ushered into the World after a different manner. Now, though, Gentlemen, I pay you a very particular Respect, yet you will pardon me if I choose rather to point out my own Deficiencies than leave them to you to find out after me, lest, notwithstanding your Candour, something should be ascribed to my Laziness or Negligence that ought more justly to be attributed to the Influence of inexorable Necessity. Wherefore, in the first Place, could I have been Master of my own Time and Circumstances, I would never have published any thing of this Kind at all, till I had perfectly finished the first Part of it according to the natural Division to which the Circumstances of the Saracen Empire directed the Arabian Historians of Course: That is, from the time of Mahomet's Birth to the Ruin of the House of Ommiyah by that of Abbàs, which was entirely effected in that Part of the Year of the Hegirah One Hundred and Thirty Two, which answers to Part of the Year of our Lord Seven Hundred and Fifty. Which Period would have included several other Conquests besides that of Spain.

I mention the Life of MAHOMET becauſe it is the Foundation of all our Hiſtory; and though what hath been written of it by the Reverend and Learned Dr. Prideaux is ſufficient to give a general Idea of the Man and his Pretenſions, and admirably accommodated to his principal Deſign of ſhewing the Nature of an Impoſture; yet there are a great many very uſeful Memoirs of him left behind, which would tend very much to the Illuſtration of the ſucceeding Hiſtory, as well as the Cuſtoms of thoſe Times wherein he flouriſhed. In the next Place, whereas my firſt Volume bears the Title of the Saracens Conqueſt of Syria, Perſia and Ægypt; though it contains the Times of them all, yet the Particulars chiefly relate to Syria, the reſt being ſupplied out of the ſhort printed Epitomes of Eutychius, Elmakin and Abu'lpharagius for want of longer Time at Oxford; from whence it comes to paſs that the Life of Othman, whoſe Reign was twelve Years, is but about a ſixth Part of the length of that of Abubeker; who reigned but two: Though it cannot be denied that it would be much better allowed both in their Hiſtorians and in us to be a little more particular in the Accounts of Syria, Paleſtine and Ægypt, ſo venerable in all our Antiquity, than in thoſe of other remote Countries, of the Succeſſion of whoſe Princes we have no certain Account, and of which we are hardly able to aſcertain the Borders.

To have rendered the Work compleat in its kind; not only an accurate Map ought to have been made of the Countries, but Geographical Deſcriptions of the moſt eminent Places out of their own Authors. The Ancient Tribes of the Arabians ſhould have been fixed in their proper Habitations in a Map of Arabia made for the ſame Purpoſe.

But theſe were things rather to be deſired than hoped for; and if I had ſtaid till I could have got all this Preparation, I muſt never have publiſhed any of it at all as long as I had lived. The Ancients oftentimes thought a Life well ſpent in poliſhing one ſingle Book; and certainly were very much in the Right of it, if (as moſt certainly they did) they intended to perpetuate their Memories to Poſterity, and eke out periſhing Mortality with an Addition of Glory. We can no ſooner propoſe any thing though it requires never ſo much Care and Application, but we are daily importuned to know when it is to come out. This is our Comfort, that the Ancients are in their Graves, and though we can, when we find Leiſure, read their Books, they ſhall never ariſe from the Dead to read ours.

But neither is the Modern Taſte always ſo low; (that we may not affectedly attribute every thing to the Ancients) Monſieur Petis de la Croix, that famous Oriental Interpreter to the late Lewis XIV. of France, when commanded by the great Colbert to write the Life of Jenkiz-Chan, thought not ten Years time too much to employ about it, as his Son acknowledges in the Preface; though he neither wanted Books, Leiſure, Abilities nor Encouragement. It is not only the following ſuch Authors as have made it their buſineſs to write the Lives of ſuch or ſuch Princes is ſufficient; but it is alſo neceſſary to gather up the ſcattered Remains that occur in other Hiſtorians; in Commentators upon the Alcoran; in the Scholiaſts of their Poets; in their Medals, Inſcriptions and Lexicographers. The Hiſtorian muſt alſo trace the Originals of Cuſtoms, Sirnames, Tribes and the like; and in a word, in diſpoſing all the Materials with ſuch Judgment that every part may fall naturally into its proper place, and add a Luſtre to the whole.

ry

But my unhappy Condition hath always been widely different from any thing that could admit of ſuch an Exactneſs. Fortune ſeems only to have given me a Taſte of it out of Spight, on Purpoſe that I might regret the Loſs of it. Though perhaps I may accuſe her wrongfully for befriending me with an Excuſe for thoſe Blemiſhes that would have admitted of none had

I been furniſhed with all thoſe Aſſiſtances and Advantages, the want of which I now bewail. If that was her Meaning, ſhe hath been very tender of my Reputation indeed, and reſolved that my Adverſaries ſhould have very little Reaſon to accuſe me of the Loſs of Time. The firſt Volume coſt me two Journeys to Oxford, each of them of ſix Weeks only, (incluſive of the Delays upon the Road, and the Difficulty of finding the Books without any other Guide than the Catalogue, not always infallible.) But my chief Buſineſs lying then in [9] one Author, it was ſo much the eaſier to make a quick Diſpatch; becauſe it is of no ſmall Moment in Affairs of this Nature to be once well acquainted with the Hand of the Manuſcript, and the Stile of the Author.

But in my Second Undertaking I found a quite different Appearance of things in more reſpects than one. Either my Domeſtick Affairs were grown much worſe, or I leſs able to bear them, or, what is moſt probable, both. What made me eaſy as to my Journey and Charges during my Abſence, was the Liberality of the Worſhipful Thomas Freke, of Hannington, Wilts, Eſq; to whom the World is indebted for whatſoever is performed at preſent in this Second Volume; I mean with Regard to the Expences

[9] Alwákidi.

of

of it: Which ſtill would not have anſwered the End if I had not been indulged all poſſible Conveniencies of Study, firſt by the Favour of my much Honoured Friend, the incomparable Dr. Halley, who, with the Conſent of his Learned Colleague Dr. Keil, allowed me the Keys of the Savilian Study; and in the next Place by the Reverend and Learned Dr. Hudſon, chief Library-Keeper of the Bodleian; who according to his wonted Humanity permitted me to take out of the Library whatſoever Books were for my Purpoſe; otherwiſe though I had five Months Time, much could not have been done, conſidering the Variety and Difficulty of the Manuſcripts; beſides that I was forced to take the Advantage of the Slumbers of my Cares, that never ſlept when I was awake; and if they did not inceſſantly interrupt my Studies, were ſure to ſucceed them with no leſs Conſtancy than Night doth the Day. Though it would be the height of Ingratitude in me not to acknowledge that they were daily alleviated by the Favours and Courteſies which I received from Perſons of the greateſt Dignity and Merit in that Noble Univerſity; too numerous to be all here inſerted, and all too worthy (ſhould I mention any one of them) to be omitted.

Some ſuch Apology as this will always be neceſſary for him that undertakes a Work of this Nature upon his own bottom without proper Encouragement. If any one ſhould pertly aſk me, Why then do you trouble the World with things that you are not able to bring to Perfection? Let them take this Anſwer of one of our[7] famous Arabian Authors; What cannot totally be known, ought not to be totally neglected; for the Knowledge of a Part is better than the Ignorance of the Whole.

[7] Abu'lpheda, Præf. ad Geograph.

MSS.

MSS. Authors made use of in this History.	Their Places in the Bodleian Library.
THE First Volume of Abu'l-pheda's Universal History.	Pocock's MSS. Num. 303.
The Second Volume of the Alcámil, or Universal History, by Ebno'l Athir.	ibid. Num. 137.
The Fifth Volume of the same.	ibid. Num. 103.
History of Jerusalem.	ibid. Num. 362.
The Seventh Volume of the Memorial of Ebn Hamdoun, containing a Collection of Speeches, Epistles, and Messages.	ibid. Num. 328.
Ebn Chalecan's History of the Deaths of Great Men. Two Volumes Folio.	ibid. Num. 335, 336.
—— Another Copy of the same, in five Volumes Folio.	Huntington's MSS. Num. 58 & seq.
The Sentences of ALI.	ibid. Num. 431.
History of the Chaliphs from the latter end of Ali's Government to the Reign of Merwàn the Son of Alhakem. (Imperfect and Anonymous, but Optimæ Notæ.)	ibid. Num. 495.
An Imperfect Historian (and therefore Anonymous,) in Folio, with Points diligently written, and of singular Use in this History.	Laud's MSS. Num. 161. A.
The Second Volume of Altabari's Great History.	ibid. Num. N. 55. 124.
Yacutus Hamawaeus his Geography, (unless my Conjecture fails me) there are two Volumes wanting of five, viz. the first and the third.	Armachan. MS. NS. 150, 151, 152.

A Chronological Table for 51 Years.

Years of the Julian Period.	Years of Christ, reckoning from the first day of January.	Years of the Hegirah or Flight of Mahomet, with the days of the Month on which they begin in the Solar Year.	Grecian Emperors.	Saracenical Caliphs.
5368	655	35. July 10	CONSTANS 14	ALI.
9	656	36. Jun. 29	Son of Constantine 15
5370	657	37. Jun. 18	16
1	658	38. Jun. 8	17
2	659	39. May 28	18
3	660	40. May 16	19	HASAN.
4	661	41. Mry 6	20	MOAWIYAH I.
5375	662	42. April 25	21
6	663	43. April 14	22
7	664	44. April 3	23
8	665	45. March 23	24
9	666	46. March 13	25
5380	667	47. March 2	26
1	668	48. Feb. 19	27
2	669	49. Feb. 8	CONSTAN- 1
3	670	50. Jan. 28	TINUS 2
4	671	51. Jan. 17	3
5385	672	52. Jan. 7 53. Dec. 26	4 5
6	673	54. Dec. 15	6
7	674	55. Dec. 5
8	675	56. Nov. 24	7
9	676	57. Nov. 13	8
5390	677	58. Nov. 2	9
1	678	59. Oct. 22	10
2	679	60. Oct. 12	11	YEZID I.
3	680	61. Sept. 30	12
4	681	62. Sept. 19	13
5395	682	63. Sept. 9	14
6	683	64. Aug. 29	15	MOAWIY-
7	684	65. Aug. 17	16	AH II.
8	685	66. Aug. 7	JUSTINIA- 17
9	686	67. July 27	NUS II. 2
5400	687	68. July 17	3
1	688	69. July 5	4
2	689	70. Jun. 24	5
3	690	71. Jun. 14	6
4	691	72. Jun. 3	7

A Chronological Table for 51 Years.

Remarkable Actions or Accidents.

Y. H.

35 36 Moawiyah, Ayesha, Telha and Zobeir make a power Opposition against Ali.

37 38 The Battles at Seffein between Ali and Moawiyah. Amrou over-reacheth his Colleague Abu Musa in the Arbitration between Ali and Moawiyah.

39 40 41 Ali and Moawiyah are both assassinated. Ali dies. Moawiyah narrowly escapeth. Hasan resigns the Government to Moawiyah.

42 43 Amrou Ebno'l Aas the famous Conqueror and Lieutenant of Ægypt dies.

44 45 46 Moawiyah owns Ziyàd the Son of Somyah for his Brother; and makes him Governour of the Eastern Provinces. Zeid, a Man of singular Learning and Modesty, dies.

47 48 49 50 51 Constantinople besieged seven Years. Abu Iyub killed there.

52 53 Ziyàd, the Son of Somyah, dies.

54 55 56 57 Moawiyah attempting to remove Mahomet's Pulpit from Medinah to Damascus, they that set about it are terrified by an Eclipse. Moawiyah makes the Government Hereditary; by obliging the Provinces to acknowledge his Son Yezid his lawful Heir and Successor.

58 59 60 61 62 Moawiyah dies. Hosein the Son of Ali sets up for the Government, and marcheth from Meccah towards Cufah. He is killed upon the Plains of Kerbelah. After his Decease Abdollah the Son of Zobeir declares openly against Yezid at Medinah. Medinah besieged. (Anno 64.)

63 64 65 66 67 And taken. Meccah besieged. The Siege raised upon the News of Yezid's Death. Solyman, the Son of Sorad, encourages Ali's Party to revenge the Death of Hosein. He is killed, and Almochtar makes his Appearance, Anno 65. He revengeth Hosein's Death. Almochtar is killed by Musàb.

68 69 70 Abdòlmélick marches against Musàb, and kills him.

71 72 Musàb killed by Abdòlmélick. The Sect of the Azarakites raise a Commotion in the East.

73 Ab-

A Chronological Table for 51 Years.

Years of the Julian Period.	Years of Christ, reckoning from the first day of January.	Years of the Hegirah or Flight of Mahomet, with the Days of the Month on which they begin in the Solar Year.	Grecian Emperors.	Saracenical Caliphs.
5405	692	73. May 22	8
6	693	74. May 12	9
7	694	75. May 1	LEONTIUS 10
8	695	76. April 21	PATRICIUS. 2
9	696	77. April 9	3
5410	697	78. March 29	4
1	698	79. March 19	TIBERIUS 1
2	699	80. March 8	Apsimarus. 2
3	700	81. Feb. 25	3
4	701	82. Feb. 14	4
5415	702	83. Feb. 3	5
6	703	84. Jan. 23	6
7	704	85. Jan. 13	7
8	705	86. Jan. 1	JUSTINIAN 1 Restored.

A Chronological Table for 51 Years.

Remarkable Actions or Accidents.

Y. H.
73	Abdollah, the Son of Zobeir, is beſieged in Meccah, and killed.
74	Hejage made Governour of Irak, Choraſan, and Sigiſtan.
75
76	Shebib riſes againſt Hejage.
77	He is killed.
78
79
80
81	Mohammed, the Son of Haniphiyah, dies.
82	Abdorrahman rebells againſt Hejage. Kills himſelf by a Fall from an Houſe.
83
84
85
86	Abdolmélick dies.

For

For the greater Illuſtration of the Mahometan Creed and Practice, I thought fit to inſert their Famous Doctor [1] Algazáli's Interpretation of the two Articles of their Faith, viz. There is no God but God; Mahomet is the Apoſtle of God.

PRaiſe be to God the Creator and Reſtorer of all things: Who does whatſoever he pleaſes, who is Maſter of the Glorious Throne and Mighty Force, and directs his ſincere Servants into the right way and the ſtreight path: Who favoureth them, after their having born Teſtimony to the UNITY, with the preſervation of their Confeſſions from the darkneſſes of doubt and heſitation: Who directs them to follow his choſen Apoſtle, upon whom be the Bleſſing and Peace of God; and to go after his moſt honourable Companions to whom he hath vouchſafed his aſſiſtance and direction which is revealed to them in his Eſſence and Operations by the Excellencies of his Attributes, to the Knowledge whereof no Man attains but he that hath been taught by hearing. Who maketh known to them that as touching his Eſſence, he is ONE, who hath no Partner: Singular, without any thing like him: Uniform, having no Contrary:

[1] Vide Pocock Specimen Hiſtoriæ Arabum, p. 274.

Se-

Separate, having no Equal. That he is Ancient, having no Firſt: Eternal, having no Beginning; remaining for ever, having no End; continuing to Eternity, without any Termination. Who perſiſts, without ceaſing to be; who remains without failing, Who never did ceaſe nor ever ſhall ceaſe; to be deſcribed by Glorious Attributes, nor is ſubject to any decree ſo as to be determined by any preciſe limits or ſet times, but is the Firſt and the Laſt, and is within and without.

* What he is not] And that he, (Glorified be his Name) is not a Body endued with Form, nor a Subſtance circumſcribed with limits or determined by meaſure; neither doth he reſemble Bodies as they are capable of being meaſured or divided. Neither is he a Subſtance, neither do Subſtances exiſt in him, neither is he an Accident, nor do Accidents exiſt in him; but that neither is he like to any of thoſe things that do exiſt, neither is any thing like to him; nor is he terminated by quantity nor comprehended in bounds, nor circumſcribed by the differences of Situation nor contained in the Heavens: But that he ſits upon the Throne, after that manner which he himſelf hath deſcribed, and in that ſame ſenſe which he himſelf means, which is a ſitting that is far removed from any notion of Contact, or reſting upon, or local Situation; but both the Throne it ſelf, and whatſoever is upon it are ſuſtained by the goodneſs of his Power

Power, and are ſubject to the graſp of his hand. But he is above the Throne and above all things even to the utmoſt ends of the Earth; but ſo above as at the ſame time not to be a whit nearer the Throne and the Heaven; ſince he is exalted by [infinite] degrees above the Throne no leſs than he is exalted above the Earth, and at the ſame time is near to every thing that hath a being; nay, [4] nearer to Men than their Jugular veins, and is witneſs to every thing: Though his nearneſs is not like the nearneſs of Bodies, as neither is his Eſſence like the Eſſence of Bodies. Neither doth he exiſt in any thing, neither doth any thing exiſt in him, but that he is too high to be contained in any Place, and too Holy to be determined by Time; for he was before Time and Place were Created, and is after the ſame manner as he always was. And that he is diſtinct from the Creatures by his Attributes, neither is there any thing beſides himſelf in his Eſſence, nor is his Eſſence in any other beſides him. And that he is too Holy to be Subject to Change, or any local Motion, neither do any Accidents dwell in him nor any Contingencies befall him, but he abides through all Generations with his Glorious Attributes, free from all danger of diſſolution. And that as to the Attributes of his Perfection, he wants no Addition of Perfection. And that as to his Being, he is known to Exiſt by

[4] Alcoran.

the

the Apprehenſion of the Underſtanding; and ſeen as he is by Ocular Intuition out of his Mercy and Grace to the Holy in the Eternal Manſion, compleating their Joy by the Viſion of his Glorious Preſence.

* His Power.] And that HE, Praiſed be his Name, is Living, Powerful, Mighty, Omnipotent not liable to any defect or impotence; who neither Slumbers nor Sleeps, nor is obnoxious to Decay nor Death. To whom belongs the Kingdom, and the Power, and the Might. His is the Dominion, and the Excellency; and the Creation, and the Command thereof. And the Heavens are folded up in his right Hand, and all the Creatures are couched within his graſp. And that his Excellency conſiſts in his Creating and Producing; and his Unity in communicating Exiſtence and Original. He Created Men and their Works, and meaſured out their maintenance and their determined times. Nothing can eſcape his graſp that is poſſible, nor the Viciſſitudes of things get out of the reach of his Power. The Effects of his Power are innumerable, and the Objects of his Knowledge Infinite.

* His Knowledge.] And that HE, Praiſed be his Name, knows all things that can be underſtood, and comprehends whatſoever paſſes; from the Extremities of the Earth to the Higheſt Heavens; ſo that the weight of a Piſmire ſhould not eſcape him either in Earth or Heaven; but he would know the creeping of the black Piſmire in the dark Night upon the hard Stone, and apprehend the Motion of an Atom in the open Air; and knows what is ſecret and conceals it; and views the Conceptions of the minds, and the Motions of the thoughts and the inmoſt receſſes of Secrets by a knowledge Ancient, Eternal, that never ceaſed to be his Attribute from Eternal Eternity. Not by a New Knowledge, ſuperadded to his Eſſence, either Inhering or Adventitious.

* His Will.] And that HE, Praiſed be his Name, doth WILL thoſe things to be that are, and diſpoſeth of all Accidents, and that there paſſeth nothing in the Empire, nor the Kingdom, neither little nor much, nor ſmall nor great, nor good nor evil, nor profitable nor hurtful, nor Faith nor Infidelity, nor Knowledge nor Ignorance, nor Proſperity nor Adverſity, nor Increaſe nor Decreaſe, nor Obedience nor Rebellion, but by his determinate Counſel and Decree, and his definitive Sentence, and Will. Nor doth the wink of him that ſeeth, nor the Stricture of him that thinketh exceed the bounds of his Will; but that it is HE who gave all things their Beginning, he is the Creator and Reſtorer, the ſole Operator of what he pleaſes, there is no reverſing his Decree nor delaying what he hath determined, nor is there any Refuge to Man from his Rebellion againſt him, but only his Help and Mercy; nor hath any Man

any

any Power to perform any Duty towards him, but through his Love and Will: Though Men and Genius's, Angels and Devils ſhould conſpire together either to put one ſingle Atome in Motion or cauſe it to ceaſe its Motion without his Will and Approbation, they would not be able to do it: And that his Will ſubſiſts in his Eſſence amongſt the reſt of his Attributes, and was from Eternity one of his Eternal Attributes; by which he willed from Eternity the Exiſtence of thoſe things that he had decreed, which were produced in their proper ſeaſons according to his Eternal Will; without any BEFORE or AFTER, but as they were agreeable to his Knowledge and Will. Not by Methodizing of thoughts, nor waiting for a proper time; for which reaſon one thing doth not hinder him from another.

* His Hearing and Sight.] And that HE, Praiſed be his Name, is HEARING and SEEING and heareth and ſeeth; No [2] Audible Object, how ſtill ſoever, eſcapeth his Hearing; nor is any thing viſible ſo ſmall as to eſcape his Sight. For Diſtance is no Hindrance to his Hearing, nor Darkneſs to his Sight: He ſees without Apple of the Eye or Eye-Lids; and hears without any Paſſage or Ear; as he knoweth without a Heart, and performs his Actions without the Assistance of any Corporeal Limb; and creates without any Instrument; for his Attributes [or Properties] are not like those of Men any more than his Essence is like theirs.

[2] We are not to underſtand thoſe Words Audible, Viſible, as if it were neceſſary it ſhould be ſo to us, but in its own Nature.

* HisWord.] Furthermore, that he doth speak, command, forbid, promise and threaten by an Eternal Ancient Word subsisting in his Essence: Neither is it like to the Word of the Creatures, nor doth it consist in a Voice arising from the Commotion of the Air and the Collision of Bodies, nor Letters which are separated by the joyning together of the Lips or the Motion of the Tongue. And that the Alcoran, the Law, the Gospel and the Psalter, are Books sent down by him to his Apostles; and that the Alcoran indeed is read with Tongues, written in Books, and kept in Hearts; subsisting in the Essence of God, neither doth it become liable to Separation and Division whilst it is transferred into the Hearts and the Papers. Also that Moses did hear the Word of God without Voice or Letter, even as the Saints behold the Essence of God without Substance or Accident. And that since these are his Attributes, He liveth and knoweth, is powerful and willeth and operateth, and seeth and speaketh, by Life and Knowledge, and Will and Hearing, and Sight and Word, not by his simple Essence.

* His Works.] And that HE, Praised be his Name, exists after such a manner that nothing besides beſides him hath any Being but what is produced by his Work, and floweth from his Juſtice after the Beſt, moſt Excellent, moſt Perfect and moſt Juſt Manner, and that he is wiſe in his Works, and juſt in his Decrees: Nor is his Juſtice to be compared with the Juſtice of Men, becauſe a Man may be ſuſpected of Acting injuſtly by invading the Poſſeſſion of another; But no Injuſtice can be conceived of God, who can find nothing belonging to any other beſides himſelf, ſo as if any Injury could be imputed to him as concerning himſelf with things not appertaining to him; but all things, He only excepted, Genius's, Men, the Devil, Angels, Heaven, Earth, Animals, Plants, Subſtance, Accident, Intelligible, Senſible, were all created anew; and that he created them by his Power after meer Privation, and brought them into Light when they were nothing at all, but he alone exiſted from Eternity, neither was there any other with him. Now he produced the Creatures anew for the Manifeſtation of his Power, and his Precedent Will, and the Confirmation of his Word which was true from all Eternity, not that he ſtood in need of them, nor wanted them: And that he manifeſtly declared his Glory in Creating, and Producing, and Commanding, without being under any Obligation; and in affording Grace and doing Good, not out of any Neceſſity; ſince Loving-Kindneſs, and ſhewing Favour and Grace and Beneficence, belong to him; whereas it is in his Power to pour forth upon Men Variety of Torments, and afflict them with various Kinds of Sorrows and Diseases, which if he should do, it would be Justice in him, not reproachful nor Injustice. And that he rewards those that worship him for their Obedience upon the account of his Promise and Beneficence, not of Merit nor Necessity, since there is nothing which he can be tied to perform, nor can any Injustice be feigned in him, nor can he be under any Obligation to any Person whatsoever. But that the Creatures are obliged to serve him ariseth from his having declared by the Tongues of the Prophets that it was due to him from them: Not by the simple Dictate of the Understanding, but that he sent them Messengers whose Veracity he had proved by manifest Miracles, who brought down from him to Men Commands and Promises and Threats, whereby Men are therefore obliged to give Credit to them in those things that they relate.

Power

The Signification of the Second Article.] That is the [3] Testimony concerning the Apostle. And that HE, Most High, sent Mahomet the illiterate Prophet of the Family of the Koreish to deliver his Message to all the Arabians and Barbarians, and Genii and Men; and abrogated by his Religion all other Religions except those things which he confirmed; and gave him the Preference over all the rest of the Prophets, and made him

[3] Mahomet is the Apostle of God.

Lord

Lord over all Mortal Men. Neither would he have the Faith be compleated by the Teſtimony of the UNITY, that is the ſaying there is but ONE GOD, without the Addition of the Teſtimony of the Apoſtle, by ſaying, Mohammed is the Apoſtle of God. And he hath made it neceſſary to Men to give Credit to him in thoſe things which he hath related both with regard to this preſent World, and the Life to come. For a Man's Faith is not accepted till he is fully perſuaded of thoſe things which he hath affirmed ſhall be after Death. The firſt of which is the Examination of Munkir and Nakir, who are two Perſons of a moſt terrible and horrible Aſpect that ſhall ſet [every] Man upright in his Grave, conſiſting both of Soul and Body, and aſk him concerning the UNITY and the Miſſion [of the Apoſtle] ſaying, Who is thy Lord? And what is thy Religion? And who is thy Prophet? And that theſe are the Searchers of the Grave, and their Examination the firſt Tryal after Death: And that he believe the Torment of the Sepulchre, and that it is Due, and Right and Juſt both upon the Body and the Soul according to his Will.

He ſhall alſo Believe in the Balance with two Scales and a Beam that ſhall equal the Extent of the Heavens and the Earth; wherein the Works [of Men] ſhall be weighed by the Power of God; at which time Weights not heavier than Atoms or Muſtard-Seeds ſhall be brought out that things may may be balanced with the utmoſt Exactneſs and perfect Juſtice adminiſtered. Then the Books of the good Works, beautiful to behold, ſhall be caſt into the Balance of Light, by which the Balance ſhall be depreſſed according to their Degrees with God, out of the Favour of God. But the Books of evil Deeds, naſty to look upon, ſhall be caſt into the Balance of Darkneſs, with which the Scale ſhall lightly aſcend by the Juſtice of the moſt High God.

He muſt alſo believe that there is a real way, which is a Body extended over the middle of Hell, ſharper than a Sword, and finer than an Hair, upon which the Feet of the Infidels ſhall ſlip by the Decree of God, ſo as they ſhall fall into Hell-Fire, whilſt the Feet of the Faithful ſhall remain firm, and they ſhall be conducted into the Eternal Habitation.

He ſhall alſo believe the Pond where they go down to be watered, that is the Pond of Mahomet, upon whom be the Bleſſing and Peace of God, out of which the Faithful drink before they enter into Paradiſe after they have paſſed over that way, and out of which whoſoever drinketh once ſhall thirſt no more for ever. Its Breadth is a Months Journey, it is whiter than Milk, and ſweeter than Honey. Round about it ſtand Cups as innumerable as the Stars, and it hath two Canals whereby the Water of the [River] Cauthar is derived into it.

He

He ſhall alſo believe the [laſt] Account, in which Men ſhall be divided into thoſe that ſhall be reckoned withal with the utmoſt Strictneſs, and thoſe that ſhall be dealt withal more favourably, and thoſe that ſhall be admitted into Paradiſe without any manner of Examination at all, namely thoſe whom God ſhall cauſe to approach near to himſelf. And that God will ask any of his Apoſtles, whomſoever he ſhall pleaſe, concerning their Miſſion, and whomſoever he ſhall pleaſe of the Unbelievers what was the Reaſon why they accuſed thoſe that were ſent to them of Lying: He will alſo examine the Hereticks concerning Tradition, and the Faithful concerning their good Works.

He ſhall alſo believe that they that confeſs one God ſhall at length go out of the Fire after they have underwent the Puniſhment due to their Sins, ſo that by the favourable Mercy of God no Perſon ſhall remain in Hell who acknowledged the Unity of the Godhead.

Alſo the Interceſſion of the Prophets, next of the Doctors, then of the Martyrs, and finally of the reſt of the Faithful (that is, every one according to his Excellency and Degree) and that whoſoever remain of the Faithful beſides theſe, and have no Interceſſor, ſhall go out by the Grace of God; neither ſhall any one of the Faithful remain for ever in Hell, but ſhall go out from thence though he had but ſo much Faith in his Heart as the Weight of an Atome.

It is also necessary that he acknowledge the Excellency of the Companions [of Mahomet] and their Degrees; and that the most Excellent of Men next to Mahomet is Abubeker, then Omar, then Othman, and then Ali, and that he entertain a good Opinion of all the Companions, and celebrate their Memories, according as God and his Apostle hath celebrated them all. And all these things are received by Tradition, and evinced by evident Tokens, and he that confesseth all these things, and surely believeth them, is to be reckoned amongst the Number of those that embrace Truth, and of the Congregation of those that walk in the received way, separated from the Congregation of those that err, and the Company of Hereticks.

[4] These are the things that every one is obliged to believe and confess that would be accounted worthy of the Name of a Musleman, and that according to the literal Meaning of the Words, not as they may be made capable of any sounder Sense. According to the same Author of this Exposition, who says that, Some pretending to go deeper, have put an Interpretation upon those things that are delivered concerning the World to come, as the Balance and the Way and some other things besides, but it is Heresy.

[4] Vid. Pocock, p. 222. Spec. Hist. Arab.

HISTORY

HISTORY
OF THE SARACENS.

ALI. An. Heg. 35. cœpit ful. 10. A. C. 655.

IT is very well worth obſerving in the Beginning of this Hiſtory, that the ſeeming Agreement of the Arabians in the Profeſſion of the ſame Religion, had not ſufficient Influence upon them to extinguiſh old Grudges and Family Quarrels. Telha and Azzobéir, two leading Men amongſt them, and Ayeſha, Mahomet's youngeſt and beſt beloved Wife, were Ali's irreconcilable and implacable Enemies. However, Ali having married Phatemah, Mahomet's Daughter, the Arabians, there being no Male-Iſſue remaining of their Prophet, favoured his Intereſt, deſirous of being governed by a Succeſſion of Caliphs deſcended from the Loyns of Mahomet. Telha and Azzobéir were ſo well appriſed of this, that they thought it Prudence to diſſemble their Hatred ſo far, that the very ſame Day on which Othman was murdered, they took took the Oath of Allegiance to Ali, with a ſtedfaſt Reſolution of breaking it, as ſoon as a favourable Opportunity ſhould offer it ſelf. The Caſe was, that the Inhabitants of the ſeveral Provinces, who had come together from all Quarters of the Empire, from Syria, Ægypt, Meſopotamia, Perſia and Arabia, upon the Account of the Complaints made againſt Othman, whereof we have given an Account in the former Volume, were reſolved not to be kept in Suſpence, but to know whom they were to depend upon for their Emperor: [8] And threatned all the Candidates with Death if they did not ſpeedily fix upon ſome one or other. Some of the Baſſorians favoured Telha; the Cufians, Egyptians, and the greateſt Part of the Arabians were for Ali. Zobéir had a Party of the Baſorians in his Intereſt, who threatned him with Death, if he did not either take the Government upon himſelf, or take Care to ſee it conferred upon ſome other Perſon.

ALI. An. Heg. 35. cœpit Jul. 10. A. C. 655.

In this Confuſion ſeveral of them came to Ali, and deſired him to accept of the Government; to which he anſwered, that he had no Need of it himſelf, but had much rather give his Conſent to the Choice of any Perſon they ſhould agree upon. They ſtill inſiſted, that there was none ſo well qualified as he, whether he

[8] Ebn'l Athir.

were

were considered with Regard to his Personal Accomplishments, or his near Relation to the Prophet. He replied, that he had much rather serve any Person, they should think fit to chuse, in the Capacity of a [4]Vizier, than take the Government upon himself. Upon his obstinate Refusal, a great many of them of the several Provinces, who were all well enough satisfyed with the Murder of Othman,[5] but could not so well agree in the Choice of a Successor, perceiving also that all those of the Family of Ommiyah, of which more hereafter, that had an Opportunity, had withdrawn themselves, came in a tumultuous Manner to the chief Inhabitants of Medinah, and told them, that they were the proper Persons to determine this Controversy; adding, that they would allow them one Day to consider of it, in which Time, if it was not concluded, Telha, Zobéir, Ali, and several others should be put to the Sword. Upon this they came to Ali in the Evening, earnestly intreating him to consider the Condition of their Religion, who still declining it, and desiring them to think of some other Person: They said, We adjure thee by God! Dost not thou consider in what Condition we are? Dost thou not consider the [6]Religion? Dost not thou consider the Distraction of the

ALI. An. Heg. 35. cœpit Jul. 10. A. C. 655.

[4] Abu'lpheda. [5] Ebno'l Athir. [6] Arab. Alislám. So we shall render it for the future.

ALI. An. Heg. 35. cœpit Jul. 10. A. C. 655.

People? Doſt thou not fear God? Overcome at laſt with theſe pathetical Expoſtulations, he anſwered, If I comply with you in this, I ſhall deal with you according to the beſt of my Knowledge; and if you excuſe me, there will be no other Difference between you and me but this; that I ſhall be one of the moſt ſubmiſſive and obedient to whomſoever you ſhall ſet over me. He reſolved not to accept of their Allegiance in private; for they profered to give him their Hands, (the cuſtomary Ceremony then in uſe among them upon ſuch Occaſions) at his own Houſe; but would have it performed publickly at the Moſque, that all Parties might be ſatisfied, and have no juſtifiable Cauſe of Complaint; knowing very well that Ayeſha, Telha, Azzobéir (or Zobéir) and the whole Houſe of Ommiyah, (of which Moawiyah, then Othman's Lieutenant in Syria, was Chief,) would never omit the leaſt Opportunity of giving him the utmoſt Diſturbance that lay in their Power. Wherefore in the Morning he went to the Moſque, dreſſed in a thin Cotton Gown tied about him with a Girdle; a coarſe Turbant upon his Head, his Slippers in one Hand, and a Bow in the other inſtead of a walking Staff. Telha and Zobéir not being preſent they were ſent for, and came and offered him their Hands as a Mark or Token of their Approbation. Ali bad them, if they did do

ALI. An. Heg. 35. cœpit Jul 10. A. C. 655.

do it, be in good Earneſt, otherwiſe he would give his own Hand to either of them that would accept of the Government, which they both refuſed, and gave him theirs. The Eaſtern Nations are generally addicted to Superſtition, and great Obſervers of Omens: When Telha offered Ali his Hand, which had been very much damaged and broken by ſome Wounds which he had received in the Wars; one that was preſent ſaid; that it was a bad Sign, and that it was like to be but a lame ſort of a Buſineſs that was begun with a lame Hand. How far that Preſage of his was fulfilled, will beſt appear from the Peruſal of the remaining Part of the Hiſtory of Ali.

[1] Soon after this was over, Telha and Zobéir, with ſome others of their Party, came to Ali, and complained to him of the Murder of Othman; inſinuating, that it ought by all Means to be revenged, and profering their Service. Their ſecret Deſign was to take the firſt Opportunity of making a Diſturbance among the People, which they did not in the leaſt queſtion would end infallibly in the Deſtruction of Ali and his Party. Ali told them, "That he very "well underſtood their Meaning; repreſenting "to them at the ſame Time, how impracticable "an Undertaking it would be to pretend to do

[1] Ebno'l Athîr. MS. Pocock. N. 137.

ALI. An. Heg. 35. cœpit Jul. 10. A. C. 655.

"any thing to such a Number, and of such "considerable Force; desiring them to inform "him, if it were in their Power, what proper "Method they could propose to answer their "End. They told him, they knew of none. "He swore, nor he neither, unless it were the "uniting all Parties together, if it should so "please God: Adding, that these Dissentions "had their Foundation laid in the Times of "Ignorance; (meaning, that they were ancient "Family Quarrels before Mahomet's Pretence "to Inspiration) that these discontented Peo- "ple would still increase; For the Devil never "left the Place he had taken Possession of, after "once he had made a Beginning. In such an "Affair as this, says he, one Party will approve "of what you propose, a second will be of a "different Opinion, and a third will dissent "from both the former: Wherefore consult a- "mong yourselves."

Ali in the mean time was very instant with the Coreish, (the most noble Tribe of the Arabians) walking about from one to the other, and taking all possible Opportunities of caressing them. He did not fail to express the Sense he entertained of their Excellency, and the dependance of the Welfare of the People, upon their Authority: For he was extremely concerned at the Heats and Divisions which he observed among

ALI.
An. Heg. 35.
cæpit Jul. 10.
A. C. 655.

among the People, and especially at the sudden Departure of the Ommiyan Family. When nothing could be concluded upon, Telha and Zobéir begged of Ali, one of them the Government of Cufah, the other of Baſorah, (both Places of very great Importance, the one ſituate upon the Eaſtern Bank of the River Euphrates, the other two Miles Weſtward of the Tigris) upon pretence that if any thing extraordinary ſhould happen, they would take Horſe at a Minute's warning. [1] He told them that he would conſider of that Matter. [2] Though other Hiſtorians ſay, that he put them off with a Compliment, telling them that he had no body about him of equal Capacity with themſelves, or ſo proper to Conſult withal in ſuch Emergencies, as ſuch a new eſtabliſhed Government was likely to be expoſed to: Which Anſwer of his touched them to the quick; and they knowing that Ayeſha was at Meccah, having gone thither on Pilgrimage whilſt Othman was beſieged, begged leave of him to go thither, which was granted.

[3] As ſoon as Ali was acknowledged Caliph, he reſolved to take away the Governments and Lieutenancies from all thoſe Perſons who had been put in by Othman his Predeceſſor. Almo- geirah the Son of Saïd adviſed him to forbear a little, at leaſt till he ſhould find himſelf more firmly eſtabliſhed in his Government, which Ali did [6] not approve of. The Day after Almogeirah made him another Viſit, and told him that he had changed his Opinion, at the ſame time adviſing him to follow his own Way, and proceed according to what he had at firſt propoſed himſelf. In the midſt of this Conference between Ali and Almogeirah, Abdollah the Son Abbas, who was at Meccah when Othman was killed, but upon the Election of Ali was newly returned to Medinah) chanced to come in, and finding Ali and Almogeirah together, took Occaſion to enquire of Ali, what had been the Subject of their Diſcourſe. Ali told him that Almogeirah had adviſed him to continue Moawiyah and the reſt of Othman's Lieutenants in their Places till they ſhould come in of their own Accord, and he was fixed in his Government; which I, added he, not approving, he came and told me to Day that he had altered his Opinion, and that I was in the Right. The Son of Abbas told him that Almogeirah had given him good Advice the firſt time, but the laſt was Treachery. He told him, that he was affraid that all Syria,

[1] Ebno'l Athir. [2] See Dr. Herbelot under the Title Ali. [3] Abulpheda.

ALI. An. Heg. 35. cœpit Jul. 10. A. C. 655.

[6] Dr. Herbelot ſays, Ali ſuivet ſon Conſeil: Ali followed his Counſel. Our Manuſcript ſays otherwiſe, and the Senſe proves it.

over

TO

THOMAS FREKE

Of Hannington, Wilts, Esq;

SIR,

I PRESUME to present you with these few SENTENCES, at whose Request I Translated them out of the Arabick Manuscript. Your Approbation of them, prevents my saying any thing more to You concerning them.

Only give me leave to add this, That there are few Persons of your Generous Temper, who, as You are pleased to say, value the Arabians purely upon the score of their Sincerity, and their being entirely in Earnest both in their Words and Actions. Certainly they were very much so; and it were heartily to be wished, that we who despise them, could learn, at least in that respect, to follow their Example.

Give me leave, Sir, here to acknowledge my Obligation to You, for Your kind Aſſiſtance, in promoting my Second Volume of the Hiſtory of the Saracens. You were pleaſed firſt to invite me to that Work; and the Publick will be indebted to You, at leaſt, that it was done ſo ſoon, if not that it was ever done at all.

I know, Sir, you hate Flattery, as inconſiſtent with that Simplicity of Manners which You ſo juſtly admire in the Arabians; wherefore I add no more, leſt You ſhould miſtake me.

I am, SIR,

Your moſt obliged,

humble Servant,

SIMON OCKLEY.

ALI.
An. Heg. 35.
cœpit Jul. 10.
A. C. 655.

over which Moawiyah was Lieutenant would fall off from him: That there was no Confidence to be repoſed in Telha and Zobéir: That there was reaſon rather to ſuſpect that they would both be in Arms againſt him. Wherefore, ſays he, I adviſe you to continue Moawiyah in his Place till he ſubmits to your Government; and when he has once done that, leave it to me to pull him out of his Houſe by the Ears for you whenſoever you deſire it. Ali ſwore by God, that nothing ſhould be Moawiyah's Portion but the Sword. Upon which the other told him, that he was indeed a Man of Courage, but wanted Conduct. Ali told him that it was his Buſineſs to obey. Almogeirah replied, that he did not find himſelf under any ſuch Obligation. Thus the Conference broke up, and in a ſhort time Almogeirah retired to Meccah.

The greateſt Part of the Helpers came in, except a few that had been Othman's Almoners and other Officers. [3] Hence it ſeems came the Title of the Motazeli, which in Engliſh ſignifies Separatiſts, becauſe when Ali was Proclaimed, they were of the oppoſite Party.

Ali, deaf to all Repreſentations to the contrary, reſolved to make a thorough Reformation in all the Lieutenancies; and in the beginning of the next [4] Year, ſent out his new Officers to their

[3] Abulpheda. [4] An. Heg. 36.

ALI. An. Heg. 35. cœpit Jul. 10. A. C. 655.

their reſpective Provinces. Othman the Son of Haniph was ordered to Baſorah. Ammárah the Son of Sahál to Cufah, (he was one of the Flyers.) Abdollah the Son of Abbas to Arabia Fælix, (he was one of the Helpers.) And Sahel the Son of Haniph, another of the Helpers, to Syria.

When Sahel came to Tabúk he met with a Party of Horſe; who demanded of him to give an account of himſelf, he anſwered that he was Governor of Syria. They told him that if any one elſe beſides Othman had ſent him, he might go back again about his Buſineſs. He aſked them if they had not been informed of the Fate of Othman? They told him, yes. Perceiving that there was no room for him there, he returned back to Ali. Kais went into Ægypt, where he was oppoſed by a Party of the Othmanians, who refuſed to ſubmit to Ali's Government, till Juſtice was done upon the Murtherers of Othman. Othman the Son of Haniph went to Baſorah, where he found the People divided. And receiving Information that the Cufians were reſolved not to change their Governor, returned to Ali, with the News of their Reſolution. Abu Muſa Alaſhari was then the Governor of Cufah, put in by Othman. Abidollah went to Arabia Fælix, where Yali governed by Othman's Commiſſion. Yali reſigned to him; but plundered the Treaſury firſt; and making the beſt of his Way

Way to Meccah, delivered the Money to Ayesha, Telha and Zobéir. ALI. An. Heg. 35. cœpit Jul. 10. A. C. 655.

The Separatists in the mean time, least they should be wanting in any thing that might possibly give any Disturbance to Ali's Government, carried Othman's bloody Shirt, in which he was Murthered, into Syria; where they made a very good Use of it. Sometimes it was spread upon the Pulpit; and sometimes carried about in the Army. To inflame the Matter; his Wife's Fingers, that were cut off at the time when he was Murthered, were pinned upon the Shirt. This Sight daily exposed to open View, put the Syrian Army, who were very much Indebted to Othman's Munificence, into a Rage; nothing would serve but the revenging his Death. And they indeed were in good Earnest: But the whole Secret of this Affair lyes here. Ayesha, Telha and Zobéir were always Enemies to Othman, and the Contrivers of his Death and Destruction. But when they saw Ali elected, whom they equally hated, they made use of Othman's real and sincere Friends as Instruments of their Malice against him. So that upon different Accounts they all unanimously joined in demanding Satisfaction for the Murther of Othman.

As soon as Sahel returned with his Answer from Syria, which was before Telha and Zobéir had taken their leave, he sent for them both, and and told them that what he had cautioned them againſt before, was now come to paſs; that things were carried to too great an height already to be made up without ſuch an Expedient, as ſhould make all Parties eaſy: That Sedition was like Fire, the more it burnt, the ſtronger it grew, and the brighter it ſhined. They then aſked him to give them leave to go out of Medinah, and if the Diſturbance increaſed, they would be anſwerable for it. What Anſwer he gave them I cannot ſo well tell, becauſe I am not ſure of the true Reading in my [7] obſcure Manuſcript. Here give me leave once to ſay, that if I were not deſtitute of Arabick Types, I would never be aſhamed to confeſs my Ignorance of any Paſſage that I did not perfectly underſtand, but Print it in the Original in the Margin; that I might have an opportunity of being informed by the Learned; and they might collate it with other Copies. But to gueſs once at his Senſe; the Firſt that I ſhould chuſe ſhould be this. I will contain as long as it is poſſible; if nothing will do, I muſt apply Cauſtics. He wrote forthwith to Moawiyah in Syria and Abu Muſa at Cufah. Abu Muſa ſatisfied him that all the Cufians were intirely at his Service; but ſent him at the ſame time a Catalogue of thoſe who came in of their own accord at firſt;

ALI. An. Heg. 35. cæpit Jul. 10. A. C. 655.

[7] Alcámil, by Ebno'l Athir, MS. Pocock. N. 137.

and

ALI.
An. Heg. 35. cœpit Jul. 10. A. C. 655.

and those that afterwards of course followed the Majority. Moawiyah did not vouchsafe to give him one word of Answer to all his Messages; till about three Months after Othman's Death, he called a Messenger and delivered him a Letter sealed up with this Subscription; From Moawiyah to Ali. Then giving him private Instructions, he sent him away to Medinah, and Ali's Messenger along with him, whom he had detained all this while. He went into Medinah, according to his Directions, in the Evening, (when he was like to be seen by most People; for in those hot Countries the Streets are most frequented in the cool of the Day) and carried the Packet aloft upon a Staff. The People who were well enough Appriſed of Moawiyah's Disaffection to Ali, thronged after him with listening Ears, earnestly expecting the Contents of his Message. When Ali opened the Letter it was a meer Blank, not so much as one word written in it, which he rightly understood as a Token of the utmost Contempt and Defiance. Then asking the Messenger what News; he was answered, that there were no less than sixty thousand Men in Arms under Othman's Shirt, which was set up as a Standard upon the Pulpit of Damascus. Ali asked whether or no they required the Blood of Othman at his Hands? Calling God to witness that he was not Guilty of

ALI. An. Heg. 35. cœpit Jul. 10. A.C. 655.

of it, and begging his Assistance. Then turning to [3] Ziyâd who sat by him, he told him that there must of necessity be a War in Syria; which Ziyâd soon communicated to the People. Ali did all that in him lay to Encourage them, and wrote circular Letters round about to all the Provinces, to demand their Assistance.

Whilst he was making this Preparation, he was informed of the Revolt of Telha, Zobéir and Ayesha, who had formed a terrible Conspiracy against him at Meccah. For all the Male-contents, particularly those of the House of Ommiyah, which was Othman's Family, joined to the cashiered Governors; and having their Prophet's Widow at the head of them, who declared her self openly against Ali, gathered together considerable Forces, and resolved upon a War. [4] Telha and Zobéir had acquainted them at Meccah, in what an unsettled Condition Ali's Affairs were at Medinah, which induced Ayesha to perswade them to go thither, and strike at the very Root. Others were of Opinion that it was best to join the Syrians: But upon Consideration that Moáwiyah alone was sufficient to secure that part of the Country, and besides that Telha had a good Interest at Basorah, they resolved upon that Expedition; and accordingly caused

[3] This was Ziyâd Ben Hentelah of Arabia Fœlix. [4] Alcâmil MS. Pocock N. 137.

caused this Proclamation to be made about the Streets of Meccah: The Mother of the Faithful, and Telha, and Zobéir are going in Person to Basorah. Whosoever therefore is desirous of strengthening the Religion, and Fighting voluntarily to Revenge the Death of Othman, if he hath no Convenience of Riding let him come. They mounted Six Hundred Volunteers upon the like Number of Camels. They went out of Meccah about Nine Hundred or a Thousand strong; and the People joined them in their March till they were about three Thousand. [s] Menbah had presented Ayesha with a Camel, whose Name was Alascar, which in the Arabick Language signifies the Army. It cost him an Hundred Pieces. There is no certainty as to the Value of the Arabick Coins. As near as I can guess, I should take one of those Pieces of Gold to be worth almost half a Guinea of our Money; according to which Computation, Ayesha's Camel cost about Fifty Pounds. Mounted upon this Camel in a Litter she headed the Forces in their March from Meccah towards Basorah. As they were upon the Road they came to a Rivulet called Jowâb, on the side of which there was a Village of the same Name. All the Dogs of the Village came running out in a Body, and fell a barking at Ayesha; who thereupon immediately

ALI. An. Heg. 35. cæpit Jul. 10. A. C. 655.

[s] Abulpheda. MS. Pocock Num. 303.

ALI. An. Heg. 35. cœpit Jul. 10. A. C. 655.

diately asked what was the Name of the Place in a great surprize. Being informed that it was called Jowâb; she quoted that Verse of the Alcoran, which is frequently made use of in Cases of iminent Danger, [1] We are resigned to God, and to him we have Recourse. Declaring that she would not stir a step further; that she had heard the Prophet say when he was Travelling with his Wives; I wish I had known it, and they should have Lodged within the barking of the Dogs of Jowâb. [2] Besides that he had told her formerly that one of his Wives should at some time or other be barked at by the Dogs of this Place: That she ought to take care of it, because she would find her self in a bad Condition, and in very great Danger. [3] Hereupon she struck her Camel upon the Leg to make him kneel, in order to alight, and resolved to stay there all Night. Telha and Azzobéir could not tell what to make of this Whimsy; and knowing of what Importance it was for them to precipitate their March; as having very good Reason to think that Ali would not be long after them, told her, and subordined Fifty Witnesses to swear it, that it was a Mistake of the Guide, and that that Place had never been called by any such Name. But all to no purpose, she would

[1] Alcoran Chap. 11. 151. [2] Dr. Herbelot in voce Ali. [3] Abulpheda.

would not ſtir; at laſt one of them cried out, Quick, quick, yonder comes Ali; upon which they all immediately ſcampered, and made the beſt of their way to Baſorah. ALI. An. Heg. 35. cœpit Jul. 10. A.C. 655.

[4] The Hiſtorians ſay, That this was the firſt ſolemn and publick Lye that was ever told ſince the beginning of Mahometiſm; whether it be ſo or not, is not ſo very material; this is moſt certain that they who made it, found their Account in it, for it conveyed them with incredible Speed to Baſorah.

[5] Othman, who was Ali's Governor in that Place, was able to make but a weak Reſiſtance. After a Skirmiſh in which he loſt Forty of his Men, he was taken Priſoner. They tore his Beard and Eye-brows out by the Roots, and after a ſhort Confinement diſmiſſed him.

[6] One of our Authors is a little more particular. He ſays, that Ayeſha wrote to Othman at Baſorah, and to the reſt of the Provinces, exciting them to Revenge the Death of Othman; magnifying his good Qualities; and applauding (as ſhe always had done ſince his Death) the Sincerity of his Repentance, and the Barbarity of the Murder: Inveighing againſt his Enemies, as if they had broke through and trampled upon every thing that was Sacred. Othman ſent two Meſſengers to her. She gave them a Hearing, [4] Dr. Herbelot. [5] This was Othman Ben Haniph. [6] Ebn'l Athir.

ALI. An. Heg. 35. cœpit Jul. 10. A. C. 655.

and answered them in such like Terms. When they returned and made their Report, the Basorians were in Confusion. Othman, a helpless timorous Man, diſſwaded them from enterprising any thing till the Arrival of the Emperor of the Faithful, and having substituted Ammár in his Room, withdrew to his own House. Ammár called the Men to Arms, and went to the Mosque to hold a Consultation. One of them stood up and said, If these People come hither out of Fear, they are come out of a Country where a Bird may be safe. If they make enquiry after the Blood of Othman, we did not kill Othman: Wherefore take my Advice, and send them back to the Place from whence they came. Then another rose up and said; Either they suspect us guilty of the Murther of Othman; or they come to ask our Assistance against those that did Murther him, whether belonging to us or not. This Orator had no sooner spoke, but some of the Company threw Dust in his Face; by which Ammár perceived that they had a Faction in Basorah which much discouraged him. In the mean time, Ayesha advancing nearer, the Basorians went out to meet her; and they that were so inclined went over to her. They had a Debate: Telha began first, and harangued the People in the praise of Othman; he was seconded by Zobéir, who was succeeded by Ayesha. When she

ALI.
An. Heg. 35. cœpit Jul. 10. A. C. 655.

she had uttered what she had to say with her loud shrill Voice, the Company was divided, some said she had spoken right, the opposite Party gave them the Lie: Till at last they came to throwing the Gravel and Pebbles in one anothers Faces. Which when Ayesha perceived she alighted; and one of the Arabs made up to her and said; O Mother of the Faithful! The murdering of Othman was a thing of less Moment, than thy coming out from thy House upon this cursed Camel. Thou hadst a Veil and a Protection from God; but thou hast rent the Veil, and set at nought the Protection. The same Persons that are now Witnesses of thy quarrelling here will also be Witnesses of thy Death. If thou camest to us of thy own Accord, return back to thy own House; if thou camest hither by Force, call for Assistance. At the same time a young Man came up to Telha and Zobéir, and told them he perceived they had brought their Mother along with them, and asked them whether or no they had not brought their Wives too? All this was to reproach Ayesha for her Impudence, in engaging her self in this Expedition. At last they drew their Swords, and fought till Night parted them, The next Day they fought again; in which Skirmish most were killed on Othman's side, and a great many Wounded on both sides. When they grew weary of Fighting they began to Parley; and agreed upon this Article: That a Meſſenger ſhould be ſent to Medinah to enquire whether Telha and Zobéir came into the Inauguration of Ali Voluntarily or by Compulſion. For there lay the whole Difficulty. If they came in Voluntarily, all the Muſlemans would have treated them as Rebels: If by Compulſion, their Party thought they could juſtify their ſtanding by them. When the Meſſenger arrived at Medinah, and delivered his Errand, they were all ſilent for a while. At laſt Aſámah ſtood up and ſaid that they were compelled. His ſaying ſo had like to have coſt him his Life; if a Friend of his, a Man of Authority among them, had not taken him by the Hand and led him Home. To whom Aſámah ſaid, he did not think it to be a Matter of ſuch Importance as now he perceived it was. As ſoon as Ali heard this News, he wrote to Othman, and taxed the weakneſs of his Conduct; telling him that Ayeſha, Telha and Zobéir had not rejected or ſet themſelves in oppoſition to a Party, but to the whole Body of the People. That if nothing leſs than the depoſing him would ſatisfy them, they were altogether without Excuſe: But if they had any other Propoſals to make, they might be conſidered on both ſides. While theſe Matters were tranſacting at Medinah, Ayeſha's Party ſent to Othman to come out. Who anſwered that their Demand was was not conformable to the Agreement, which was to ſtay for an Anſwer from Medinah. Notwithſtanding which, Telha and Zobéir, reſolved to omit no favourable Opportunity, took the Advantage of a tempeſtuous Night, and got into the Moſque; where after a Skirmiſh, in which about Forty of Othman's Men were killed, he was himſelf ſeized, and word ſent to Ayeſha to know which way ſhe would pleaſe to diſpoſe of him. The firſt Sentence ſhe pronounced was Death; but upon one of her Women ſaying to her, I adjure thee by God and the Companions of the Apoſtle do not kill him; that Sentence was changed into forty Stripes, and Impriſonment.

ALI. An. Heg. 35. cœpit Jul. 10. A. C. 655.

ALI. An. Heg. 36. cæpit Jun. 29. A. C. 656.

We now leave Ayeſha, Telha and Zobéir in the Poſſeſſion of Baſorah, taking the Suffrages of the People for themſelves, and look back to Medinah. Where Ali made a Speech to the People, having firſt (as is always their Cuſtom) given due Praiſe and Thanks to God; in which he ſaid, The latter end of this Affair will not be rectifyed by any other means than thoſe by which it was begun; wherefore help God, and he will help you, and direct your Affairs. But this is the Caſe always when there is a ſtrong Competition; moſt People love to ſtand Neuter, and act the part of Spectators, till they ſee on which ſide the Scale will turn, rather than expoſe themſelves to apparent Danger. [1] Though Ali was exceedingly well beloved, and they knew very well that he was fairly Elected; yet all his Eloquence, though he was allowed to be the beſt Orator in that Age, was not ſufficient to move his Audience to ſtir in good Earneſt. Which [2] Ziyâd perceiving, he ſtept to Ali of his own accord, and ſaid, "Let whoſoever will hold back, we "will be forward." Then ſtood up two of the Religious, Helpers, Doctors of the Law, and pronounced this Sentence. Alhúcm, That is, the Deciſion is this. THE IMAN OTHMAN MASTER OF THE TWO TESTIMONIES DID NOT DYE BY THE MASTER OF THE TWO TESTIMONIES. That is in ſhort, Ali is not guilty of the Death of Othman. By the two Teſtimonies they mean the two Articles of their Faith, There is but one God, Mahomet is the Apoſtle of God. Which Sentence formally pronounced in favour of Ali was a mighty inducement to them to engage in his Quarrel. One of the [3] Anſars ſaid to Ali, The Apoſtle of God, upon whom be Peace, put me on this Sword: Which I have ſheathed a long while; but now it is high time to draw it againſt theſe wicked Men who are always deceiving the People. The Mother of Sal-

ALI. An. Heg. 36. cœpit Jun. 29. A. C. 656.

[1] Ebno'l Athir. [2] Ziyâd the ſon of Hantelah. [3] That was Abu Kotâdah.

nah

ALI. An. Heg. 36. cœpit Jun. 29. A. C. 656.

mah ſaid, O Emperor of the Faithful! if it would not be a ſin againſt God, and that thou wouldeſt not accept of me, I would go with thee my ſelf; but here is my Couſin German, who, by God, is dearer to me than my own Life, let him go with thee and partake of thy Fortunes. Him Ali accepted, and aftewards made Governor of Behbrîn. There marched with him about Nine hundred out of Medinah, and at firſt he conceived ſome hopes of overtaking Ayeſha and her Company before their Arrival at Baſorah; but being informed at a Place called Arrábdah that it was in vain: He reſted there to take farther Conſideration.

Thither came his Son Haſan to him, and told him that he had given him his Advice in three Particulars, and that now as the Conſequence of his refuſing it, he might expect to be murthered to Morrow without any body to help him. Upon Ali's demanding what thoſe Particulars might be; Haſan anſwered, In the firſt place, I adviſed you when Othman was beſieged, to go out of the City, that you might not be in it when he ſhould be killed. Then ſecondly, I adviſed you not to be inaugurated till the Ambaſſadors of the Tribes of the Arabs ſhould come to you; and all the Provinces were come in. Laſt of all I adviſed you when this Woman and thoſe two Men went out, to ſit ſtill at Home till they ſhould be reconciled: So that if there were any Miſchief done, the blame might rather be laid upon ſome other Perſon than your ſelf. To which Ali anſwered: As to your firſt, if I had gone out of the City when Othman was beſieged; that had been the way for me to have been ſurrounded my ſelf. Then as to your ſaying that I ought not to have been inaugurated till all the Tribes came in; you ought to know that the diſpoſal of the Government is a Privilege peculiar to the Medinians or Helpers; and we were not willing to loſe it. As for your laſt Advice, that I ſhould have ſat ſtill at Home after Ayeſha and Zobéir were gone forth; how could I do that in theſe Circumſtances, or who would? Would you have me lurk in a hole like a wild Beaſt till ſhe is digged out? If I do not my ſelf look after what concerns me in this Affair, and provide for my neceſſary Defence, who will look after it? Therefore Son, hold you your Tongue.

ALI. An. Heg. 36. cœpit Jun. 29. A. C. 656.

During his ſtay at Arrábdah he ſent Mahomet the Son of Abubeker, and Mahomet the Son of Jaafar to his Friends at Cufah with a Letter, in which he did not ſo much preſs them to fight for him, as to come and Arbitrate between him, and thoſe that had made a Separation from him. He told them, "how much he preferred them to all "the

" the reſt of the Provinces, and what confidence " he repoſed in them in the time of his Extre- " mity. That they ſhould help the Religion of " God, and repair to him in order to make uſe " of ſuch Means as might be proper for the " reconciling this divided People, and making " them Brethren again." He did not neglect in the mean time ſending to Medinah, from whence he was plentifully ſupplied with Horſes, Arms and all Neceſſaries. In his publick Harangues he repreſented to the People " the great Bleſſ- " ing which God had indulged them in giving " them the Religion; whereby thoſe Tribes were " united that formerly uſed to reduce one ano- " ther to a deſpicable Condition. That this Peace " continued, till this Man (meaning Othman) " fell into the Hands of this People, whom the " Devil had ſet on work to make a Diſturbance. " However that it was NECESSARY that " this People ſhould be divided as other Nations " had been before it; and that we muſt call to " God to avert the preſent Evil." Then turn- ing to his Son he ſaid, " Whatſoever IS is of " NECESSITY. And the time will come " when this People ſhall be divided into ſeven- " ty three Sects; the worſt of which will be " that, that ſhall ſet me at nought and will not " follow my Example. You have known this " this and ſeen it; wherefore keep cloſe to your " Re-

ALI. An. Heg. 36. cæpit Jun. 29. A. C. 656.

ALI. An. Heg. 36. cœpit Jun. 29. A. C. 656.

" Religion, and be directed in the right way; " for it is the Direction of your Prophet. Let " what is too hard for you alone, till you bring " it to the Teſt of the Alcoran: And what the " Alcoran approveth ſtandeth to, and what it " diſapproveth reject. Delight in God for your " Lord; and in [9] ISLAM for your Religion; " in Mahomet for your Prophet, and in the Al- " coran for your Guide and Director."

When they were about decamping from Arrábdah for Baſorah; the Son of Rephaa ſtood up and aſked him, O Emperor of the Faithful! What is it thou wouldeſt have, and whither wouldſt thou carry us? Ali anſwered. What I would have and intend is Peace, if they will accept of it at our Hands, if not, we will leave them alone to their Raſhneſs, and do what is juſt on our Part and bear with Patience. But how, replied Rephaa, if that will not ſatisfy them? Why then, ſays Ali, we will let them alone ſo long as they let us alone; if not, the laſt Remedy is to defend our ſelves. Upon this, one of the Anſars ſtood up, and told him, that he liked his Diſcourſe better than his Management; but ſubjoyned immediately with an Oath, That [9] That is Mahometaniſm: The Word ſignifies the delivering ones ſelf up; and with the Article Al, it is reſtrained to the ſignification of delivering ones ſelf up to God.

they

ALI. An. Heg. 36. cæpit Jun. 29. A. C. 656.

they would Help God, since he had called them HELPERS.

Soon after there came a Party of the Tribe of Tai to profer their Service to him. Their Chief, whose Name was Saïd, the Son of Obeid, thus addressed him. O Emperor of the Faithful! There are some Men whose Tongues are not according to their Hearts, but I do not find it so with me. I always have a Respect for thee both secretly and openly, and will fight thy Enemies whersoever I meet them. For I look upon thee as a Person of the greatest Merit, and the most excellent Qualifications of any in the Age thou livest in. Ali gave him his Blessing (God have Mercy upon you) and told him, that he was satisfied with his Sincerity. He then removed from Arrâbdah, and the Tribe of Ased and some more of Tai profered their Service, but he said, they might go Home, for he had [7]Mohagerins enough for his Purpose.

In the mean while, Ali was full of Expectation of News from his two Messengers that he had sent to Cufah, Abu Musa, who, as we have before observed, had sent him Word at first, that all was well on that Side the Country, and acquainted him with the Particulars of all that concerned him there; perceiving how the Face of Things was altered on a sudden, and appre-

[7] Flyers, or Refugees.

hensive

ALI. An. Heg. 26. cæpit Jun. 29. A. C. 656.

henſive of the Succeſs of Ayeſha, Telha and Zobéir at Baſorah; began to find himſelf in ſome ſort of Suſpence. So that when Mahomet, the Son of Abubeker, and Mahomet the Son of Jaafar, came to Cufah with Ali's Letter, and ſtood up among the People according to his Command, there was a perfect Silence. It is worth obſerving here, that upon all ſuch Occaſions, the Way was, for all the Congregation to run to the Moſque, where every Thing was publiſhed in the Hearing of all that were preſent; and every one (Slaves excepted) had the Liberty of aſſenting or diſſenting, according as he was influenced by his Prejudice or Judgment. At laſt in the Evening there came ſome of the Hagis, or Pilgrims, (the having been once on Pilgrimage at Meccah, entitles them to that Name, and procures them Reverence as long as they live) and aſked Abu Muſa, what he thought of going out? meaning to aſſiſt Ali. To which he gravely anſwered, My Opinion to Day is different from what it was Yeſterday. What you deſpiſed in Time paſt, hath drawn upon you what you ſee now, The going out, and ſitting ſtill at Home, are two Things. Sitting ſtill at Home is the Heavenly Way. The going out, is the Way of the World. Therefore take your Choice. None of the People took any Notice of what he ſaid, nor returned him any Anſwer. But both the

Ma-

ALI.
An. Heg. 36.
cœpit Jun. 29.
A. C. 656.

Mahometans were in a Rage, and gave him reproachful Language. To which he answered with an Oath, that the Inauguration of Othman hung still both over his own Neck and their Master's (meaning Ali) and they were resolved not to engage themselves, unless compelled by absolute Necessity, till they had got their Hands clear of the Murderers of Othman, wheresoever they were. Wherefore, adds he, you may both get you back to Ali and tell him so.

[6] Ali was then advanced as far Dúlkhâr, where his Governor Othman came to wait upon him, and told him, that he had sent him to Basorah with a Beard, but he was come back without one. Thy Sufferings, says Ali, are meritorious. All Mankind were satisfied in the Choice of two of my Predecessors, who managed agreeably both to the Written Law and the Traditional. Then a third presided over them, to whom they submitted. At last they chose me; and Telha and Zobéir came unto the Election, but did not stand to their Word. What I wonder at, is their voluntary Submission to Abubeker, Omar and Othman, and their Opposition to me! But by God, they shall both know, that I am not one jot inferior to any of my Predecessors.

[7] As soon as Ali had received Abu Musa's Answer; he dispatched Alashtar, (a Man of [6] Abu'lpheda. [7] Ebno'l Athir.

Re-

ALI. An. Heg. 36. cœpit Jun. 29. A. C. 656.

Resolution, and fit to be made use of in Cases of Difficulty) together with Ebn Abbbás to Cufa, with Instructions at large to make use of their own Discretion in rectifying whatsoever they should find amiss. When they had delivered their Errand, and desired the Assistance of the Cufians, Abu Musa made this Speech to them. "[8] Friends, the Companions of the Apostle of "God, upon whom be Peace, know more of "God and of his Apostle, than those who have "not conversed with him. And you have a "Right over us. I give you this Advice. It is "my Opinion, that you should not assume to "your selves the Authority of God, nor make "War against God. Let those that are come "along with you from Medinah, return thither "again, till they be all agreed; they know best "who is fit to be trusted." For this Disturbance is such an one, (it is a Sentence of Mahomet's) as he that sleepeth in it is better than he that is awake; and he that is awake better than he that sitteth; and he that sitteth better than he that standeth; and he that standeth better than he that walketh on Foot; and he that walketh on Foot better than he that rideth. "Sheath your "Swords and take the Heads off of your Lan-"ces; cut your Bow Strings, and receive him

[8] Ebno'l Athir.

"that

" that is injured into your Houſes till this Buſi-
" neſs is made up, and the Diſturbance ceaſed."

ALI.
An. Heg. 36.
cæpit Jun. 29.
A. C. 656.

Ebn Abbâs and Alaſhtar returning to Ali with this News, he laſt of all ſent his eldeſt Son Haſan, and [4]Ammâr along with him: Abu Muſa received Haſan, with Reſpect; but when they came into the Moſque to debate the Matter, he oppoſed it with the ſame Vigour that he had done all along before, repeating that Saying of Mahomet's (which he affirmed to have had from his own Mouth) " That there ſhould be a Se-
" dition, in which he that ſat ſhould be better " than him that ſtood, &c." Ammâr took him up briſkly, and told him, that the Apoſtle directed that Speech to him, who was better ſitting than ſtanding at any Time. Still Abu Muſa perſiſted in exerting his utmoſt to hinder them from complying with Ali's Propoſals. When the People began to be in a Tumult, Zeid, the So of Sauchân, ſtood up and pulled out a Letter from Ayeſha, commanding him either to ſtay at Home, or elſe come to her Aſſiſtance: Together with another to the Cufians to the ſame Effect. Having read them both to the People, he ſaid, SHE was commanded to ſtay at Home in her Houſe, and WE [5] to fight till there ſhould be no Sedition. Now ſhe has commanded

[4] Ammâr, the Son of Yaſer.

[5] It is a Text in the Alcoran.

us

ALI. An. Heg. 36. cœpit Jun. 29. A. C. 656.

us to do her Part, and hath taken ours upon her self. This provoked the oppoſite Party, who reproached him for reflecting upon the Mother of the Faithful. The Debate grew very warm on both Sides, till at laſt Haſan, the Son of Ali, roſe up and ſaid, Hearken to the Requeſt of your Emperor, and help us in this Calamity which is fallen both upon you and us. Thus ſaith the Emperor of the Faithful. Either I do Injury my ſelf, or elſe I ſuffer Injury. If I ſuffer Injury God will help me: If I do Injury he will take Vengeance upon me. By God, Telha and Zobéir were the firſt that inaugurated me, and the firſt that prevaricated. Have I diſcovered any covetous Inclination, or perverted Juſtice? Wherefore come on, [7] and command that which is Good, and forbid that which is Evil. This moved the Audience, and the Heads of the Tribes ſpoke one after another, telling the People, that ſince they had given their Allegiance to this Man, and he had done them the Honour to ſend ſeveral Meſſages to them before, and afterwards his Son, to make them Judges and and Arbitrators in an Affair of ſuch Importance; that it was highly requiſite for them to comply with ſuch a reaſonable Demand, and go to his Aſſiſtance. Haſan told them, that he was going back to his Father, and they that thought fit might

[7] It is a Text that frequently occurs in the Alcoran.

might go along with him, and the reſt follow by Water. There came over to him near nine Thouſand in all, ſix thouſand two hundred by Land, and two thouſand four hundred by Water. Some ſay, that Ali had ſent Aſhtar and Ammar along with him after his Son Haſan to Cufah, and whilſt they were debating it in the Moſque, and every one intent upon the Iſſue, Aſhtar took a Party of Men and ſeized the Caſtle by Surprize; then having ordered ſome of Abu Muſa's Men, whom he found there, to be ſeverely banged, he ſent them back with this lamentable News to their Maſter Abu Muſa, who was ſpeeching it with great Vehemency againſt the Supply. This Management of Alaſhtar, made Abu Muſa appear ſo ridiculous and contemptible, that if Alaſhtar had not interpoſed and prevented it, his Goods would immediately have been plundered by the Mob.

ALI. An. Heg. 36. expit Jun. 29. A. C. 656.

Ali was very eaſy upon the Acceſſion of theſe new Recruits, and went forwards to meet them and make them welcome. When they came up to him, and ſaid, You Cufians were always Men of diſtinguiſhed Valour; you conquered the Kings of Perſia, and diſperſed their Forces till you took Poſſeſſion of their Inheritance. You have both protected the weak ones among your ſelves, and afforded your Aſſiſtance to your Neighbours. I have called you hither to be Witneſſes between us and our Brethren of Baſorah: If they return, it is what we deſire: If they ſhall perſiſt we will heal them with gentle Uſage, till they fall upon us injuriouſly. We on our Part will omit nothing that may by any Means contribute to an Accommodation, which we much prefer to the Deſolation of War.

ALI. An. Heg. 36. cœpit Jun. 29. A. C. 655.

Ayeſha and her Party, upon this News, began to be in ſome Perplexity at Baſorah. They had very frequent Conſultations, and ſeemed now to be in a deſpairing Condition. Meſſages paſſed backwards and forwards in order to compromiſe the Matter; and it came ſo far, that Ali, Telha and Zobéir had ſeveral Interviews, walking about together in the Sight of both the Armies, ſo that every one expected that there would have been a Peace concluded. Ali's Army conſiſted of thirty thouſand Men all experienced Soldiers, and if that of his Enemies exceeded his in Number, yet it was compoſed of ſuch as they could get; beſides that, they had never a General to command them, that was any ways comparable to Ali. In one of their Conferences he reproached their Infidelity, and put them in Mind of the Judgments of God, who would infallibly take Vengeance upon their Perfidiouſneſs. He aſked Zobéir, if he did not remember how Mahomet had aſked him once, if he did not love his dear Son Ali; and he having an-

ALI. An. Heg. 36 cœpit Jun. 29. A. C. 655.

anſwered yes, that Mahomet replyed, Notwithſtanding this, there will come a Day, when you ſhall riſe up againſt him, and be the Occaſion of a great many Miſeries both to him and all the Muſlemans.

Zobéir told him, that he remembered it perfectly well, and that if he had recollected it before, he would never have carried Things to that Extremity. It is ſaid, that upon this Hint he declined fighting with Ali; but that having acquainted Ayeſha with the Circumſtances, that Woman was ſo envenomed againſt him, that ſhe would not upon any Terms, give the leaſt Ear to an Accommodation. Others ſay, that his Son Abdollah gave him a Turn, by aſking him, whether or no he was afraid of Ali's Colours? Zobéir anſwering, No, but that he was ſworn to the contrary: Abdollah bad him expiate his Oath, which he did, [7] by giving a Slave his Liberty, and forthwith put himſelf in a Condition of fighting againſt Ali.

The two Armies lay in Order of Battel on their Arms oppoſite to one another. There happened ſome Diſturbance in the Night, the Author of which is uncertain. When Telha and Zobéir heard it, upon Enquiry into the Cauſe of it, they were anſwered that the Cufians had fallen upon them in the Night. They ſaid, they knew very well that Ali would never put up the Matter without Bloodſhed: And Ali, upon his firſt hearing it, ſaid the ſame of them. Thus they were of Neceſſity drawn to a Battle. Ayeſha, to give Life and Courage to her Friends, mounted upon her great Camel, was carried up and down in the Battel, riding in a Litter of the Shape of a Cage.

[7] Alcoran, Chap. V.

ALI. An. Heg. 36. cœpit Jun. 29. A. C. 655.

Upon which Occaſion, the [1] Day whereon this bloody Battel was fought, is called, the Day of the Camel; and the Men that were engaged on that Side, the People of the Camel. In the Heat of the Battel, when the Victory began to incline towards Ali, Merwân ſaid to him, 'Tis but a little while ago ſince Telha was amongſt the Murderers of Othman, and now he is ſo attached to Worldly Grandeur, that he appears amongſt thoſe that ſeek to revenge his Blood; and with thoſe Words let fly an Arrow and wounded him in the Leg. His Horſe threw him. He called for Help and ſaid, O God! take Vengeance upon me for Othman, according to thy Will! Perceiving his Boot full of Blood, he ordered his Man to take him up behind him, who conveyed him into a Houſe in Baſorah where he Died. But juſt before he ſaw one of Ali's Men, and aſked him if he belonged to the Emperor of the faithful. Being informed that he did;

[1] Ebno'l Athîr. D'Herbelot in Ali.

ALI.
An. Heg. 36.
cœpit Jun. 29.
A. C. 655.

did; Give me then, said he, your Hand that I may put mine in it; and by this Action renew the Oath of Fidelity which I have already made to Ali. The Words were no sooner out of his Mouth but he expired immediately: When Ali heard it he said, God would not call him to Heaven till he had blotted out his first Breach of his Word by this last Protestation of Fidelity.

[4]Mircond writes, that Zobéir being informed that Ammàr Jasser was in Ali's Camp; and knowing that Mahomet had formerly said that he was a Person that was always for Justice and what was right, withdrew himself out of the Battel, and took the Road towards Meccah. Being come as far as a Valley which is crossed by a Rivulet called Sabaa, he met with Hanaph Ben Kais who was Encamped there with all his Men, attending the Success of the Battel, in order to join himself with the Conqueror.

[5]Hanaph knew who he was at a Distance, and said to his Men, Is there no body can bring me any Tidings of Zobéir? One of them, whose Name was Amrou Ben Jarmuz went off immediately and came up to him. Zobéir bad him keep his Distance. But after some Discourse, growing into greater Confidence of him he cryed out Salàt, that is, To Prayers. (The Hour of Prayer being then come) Salàt ſaid Amrou; and as Zobéir was proſtrating himſelf, took his opportunity and ſtruck his Head off at one Blow with his Sabre; and carried it to Ali. When Ali ſaw the Head, he let fall ſome Tears and ſaid; Go wretched Villain and carry this good News to Ben Safiah in Hell. Amrou was ſo moved with theſe Words, that laying aſide all Reſpect he ſaid to him, You are the ill Deſtiny of all the Muſlemans; if one delivers you from any of your Enemies, you immediately denounce Hell to him: And if a Man kills any one of yours, he becomes inſtantly a Companion of the Devil. His Paſſion increaſing into Rage and Deſpair, he drew his Sword and ran himſelf thorough.

[4] Mircond. D'Herbelot. Ebn'l Athîr. [5] Ebn'l Athîr. D'Herbelot.

ALI. An. Heg. 36. cœpit Jun. 29. A. C. 656.

So long as Ayeſha's Camel ſtood upon his Leggs, the hotteſt of the Battel was about him. Tábari ſays that there were Threeſcore and ten Mens Hands cut off that held his Bridle. Ayeſha's Litter was ſtuck ſo full of Arrows and Javelins that it looked like a Porcupine. At laſt the Camel was Hamſtringed, and Ayeſha was forced to lye there till all was over. Ali having got an entire Victory, came to her and aſked her how ſhe did. Some Hiſtorians ſay that there was ſome reproachful Language exchanged between them. However he treated her civilly, and diſmiſſed her handſomely with a very good

[2] Equi-

ALI.
An. Heg. 36.
cœpit Jun. 29.
A. C. 656.

[2] Equipage, and commanded his two Sons Haſan and Hoſein to wait upon her a Day's Journey. He confined her to her Houſe at Medinah, and laid a Reſtraint upon her not to intermeddle any any more with Affairs of State. She went to Meccah, and ſtaid out the time of the Pilgrimage there, after which ſhe returned to Medinah. As for the Spoils Ali was for dividing them among the Heirs of his Men that were killed, which did not exceed a Thouſand. Then conſtituting Abdollah Ben Abbàs his Lieutenant over Baſorah, went to Cufah, where he eſtabliſhed the Seat of his Government or Chaliphate.

[3] This compleat Victory rendered Ali exceeding powerful. He is now Maſter of Irâck, Ægypt, Arabia, Perſia and Choraſân. So that there was none left that could give him the leaſt Diſturbance but Moawiyah and the Syrians under his Command. Ali ſeemed not to be apprehenſive of any Moleſtation from them after ſuch great Succeſs, and ſent a Meſſenger to him to come in. Moawiyah put off the Meſſenger without giving him any ſatisfactory Anſwer, till Amrou the Son of Ali who was then in Paleſtine could come to him. Amrou, to his great ſatisfaction, found the Syrians very eager to Revenge the Blood of Othman, and did what in him lay to ſpur them on. Upon this, Amrou and Moa- wiyah resolved to stand it out to the last against Ali, Amrou having first stipulated for himself, that in case of Success he should have the Lieutenancy of Ægypt, which he had Conquered in the Reign of Omar. [6] This agreed to, Amrou in the Presence of all the Army took the Oath of Allegiance to Moawiyah, acknowledging him to be lawful [7] Chaliph and Prince of the Muslemans. This Action which had been concerted between them two, was followed by the Acclamations of the People, who unanimously took the same Oath.

[2] Abu'lpheda. Rejeb. Anno 36. [3] Abulpheda.

ALI. An. Heg. 36. cœpit Jun. 29. A. C. 656.

As soon as Ali was apprised of these Commotions in Syria, he made use of all manner of gentle means, to reduce the Rebels to a Sense of their Duty. But perceiving that the People of that large Province had unanimously declared against him, he begun to fear that it would be to no purpose, to set on foot any further Negotiation; and marched with an Army of Ninety thousand Men towards that part of the Country. [8] Just upon his Entrance into the Confines of Syria, he was obliged to Encamp in a Place where he wanted Water.

Not far from his Camp, there was an Hermitage under Ground, the Hermit whereof, who was a Christian, came and offered himself

[6] D' Herbelot. [7] Abulpheragius says that they did not swear to him by the Title of Chaliph, but only of Emîr. [8] D' Herbelot.

to

ALI.
An. Heg. 36.
cœpit Jun. 29.
A. C. 656.

to him. Ali enquired of him, if there was never a Spring within the Neighbourhood; the Hermit told him that there was nothing but a Ciſtern, which had hardly three Buckets of Water in it. Ali anſwered, I know however that ſome Ancient Prophets of the People of Iſrael have made their Abode here, and that they digged a Pit here. The Hermit ſaid, he had been informed by ſome Ancient Men, that there was one indeed that was ſhut up, and no body knew where it was digged; but that the Tradition of the Country was, that no body could find it, and open it, but a Prophet, or one ſent by a Prophet. Ali was not long a finding it, and ordering them to dig in a Place, which he pointed out, found a Stone of a vaſt bigneſs that lay over it, which he inſtantly removed, with the greateſt eaſe imaginable.

The Hermit ſurprized at this ſight, embraced Ali's Knees, and would never leave him after. Beſides, he preſented him him with an old Parchment, which he ſaid was written by the Hand of Simeon, the Son of Safa, (that is Simon Cephas) one of the greateſt Apoſtles of Jeſus Chriſt; wherein there was an account given of the coming of the laſt Prophet; the Arrival of his lawful Heir and Succeſſor, and the miraculous diſcovery of this Well.

Ali, after having given Thanks to God, and taken Water ſufficient for his Army, continued his his March towards Seffein, a Place between Irâk and Syria, where the Enemies Army was posted, consisting of Fourscore Thousand Men. At last, both the Armies advancing, they came in sight of one another, in the last Month of the Thirty sixth Year of the Flight of Mahomet.

ALI. An. Heg. 36. cœpit Jun. 29. A. C. 656.

[1] The first Month of the next Year was spent, without doing any thing but sending Messengers backwards and forwards, in order to an Accommodation between them to no purpose. But upon the entrance of the next [2] Month they began to fight in Parties, without running the hazard of a general Engagement. It is reported, that in the space of One hundred and ten Days, there were no less than Ninety Skirmishes between them. That the Number of the slain on Moawiyah's side, was Five and forty Thousand, and that on Ali's [3] Five and twenty Thousand, Six and twenty of which had been present at the Battel of Beder, and were honoured with the Title of Sahabah, that is, the Companions of the Prophet. Ali had commanded his Men never to begin the Battel first, but stay till they gave the Onset, nor kill any Man that had turned his Back, nor take any of their Plunder, nor use any indecent Behaviour towards the Women. Nor were Moawiyah and Amrou wanting

[1] An. Heg. 37. cœpit Jun. 18. A. C. 657. [2] Saphar.
[3] D'Herbelot says, Five Thousand, which must be a mistake.

on

ALI.
An. Heg. 37. cœpit Jun. 18. A. C. 657.

on their ſide, in expreſſing their concern for the Effuſion of the Blood of the Muſlemans; eſpecially when Ammar Ben Jaſſar, Ali's General of the Horſe, was killed. He was about Ninety Years of Age, and had been in three ſeveral Engagements with Mahomet himſelf. He lived reverenced, and died lamented by all. Do you ſee, ſaid Moawiyah, at what a rate the People expoſe their Lives upon our account? See! ſays Amrou, would to God I had died twenty Years ago. Upon the Death of Ammar, Ali took Twelve thouſand choſen Men, and made ſuch an Impreſſion upon Moawiyah's Army, that all the Ranks of it were broken. Then Ali called out to Moawiyah, How long ſhall the People loſe their Lives between us; come hither: I challenge you to appeal to the Deciſion of God: And which ſoever of us two kills his Man, has all entire to himſelf. Whereupon Amrou ſaid to Moawiyah, Your Couſin has made you a fair Proffer. Moawiyah ſaid it was not fair, becauſe that Ali knew that no Man ever came out againſt him, but he killed him. Amrou told him that his Refuſal would look diſhonourably. Moawiyah anſwered, You have a mind to enjoy the Government your ſelf, after I am gone.

[7] The laſt Battel they fought at Seffein continued all Night to the great diſadvantage of the

[7] Abulpheda.

Sy-

ALI. An. Heg. 37. cœpit Jun. 18. A. C. 657.

Syrians. Alaſhtar puſhed them back to their Camp, and Ali ſupported him. It was very near a compleat Victory, when Amrou bethought himſelf of this Stratagem. He ſends for Moawiyah in great haſte, and adviſes him to hoiſt up the Alcorans upon the Points of their Lances, and cry out; This is the Book that ought to decide all our Differences; this is the Book of God between us and you. This Stratagem did not fail of the deſired Succeſs; for as ſoon as the Irakians, in whom the chief Strength of Ali's Army conſiſted, ſaw this, they threw down their Arms, and ſaid to Ali, Will you not anſwer to the Book of God? To which Ali anſwered, As you are Men of Truth and Honour, go on and fight your Enemy, for Amrou and Moawiyah have no Relation to Religion nor the Alcoran. Alas for you! I know them better than you do; By God they have not put up theſe Alcorans, but with a deſign to trick us. They anſwered, that ſhould not hinder them from being determined by the Book of God. That is it, ſaid Ali, which I have been fighting to bring them to, but they have rebelled againſt God and his Commandment. In ſhort, they threatened not only to deſert him but to deliver him into the Hands of his Enemies, if he did not ſound a Retreat: And ſome of the [9] Sectaries, (an Enthuſiaſtick People, that [9] Charegites.

refuſe

ALI. An. Heg. 37. cæpit Jul. 18. A. C. 657.

refuſe Obedience to their Superiors, both in things Sacred and Civil,) declared to him, that they would ſerve him as they had done the Son of Affàn, that is Othman, whom they murdered. So that Ali was forced to call off Alaſhtar, who came back with great Reluctancy, and not under three or four Meſſengers; grieved at the Heart, to ſee ſuch a glorious Victory wreſted out of his hands by ſuch a Stratagem.

As ſoon as the Battle was over, Moawiyah being aſked, what was the meaning of that Action, anſwered, That the Difference might be put to the Arbitration of two Perſons, who ſhould determine it according to the true Senſe of the Alcoran, and the [5] Tradition of the Apoſtle. Aſhaath, the Son of Káis, one of thoſe that had the greateſt Credit among the Soldiers of Irâk, and who was ſuſpected to have been corrupted by Moawiyah, aſked Ali, how he approved of this Expedient. Ali anſwered him coldly, He that is not at Liberty cannot give his Advice. It belongs to you to manage this Affair according as you ſhall think fit among your ſelves. The Perſon that they nominated for Ali was Abu Muſa Aláſhari, a good honeſt well meaning Man, but exceedingly ſimple. Ali did not approve of him, becauſe he had formerly been drawn aſide, and forſaken his Intereſt. He had rather have had

[5] Sunnet.

Ben

ALI. An. Heg. 37. cœpit Jul. 18. A. C. 657.

Ben Abbâs, but was answered, that he was his Cousin-German, and they would have none but such as should deal impartially between him and Moawiyah. He next nominated Alashtar, but they were resolved he should accept of Abu Musa. Moawiyah, on his Part, nominated Amrou the Son of Aasi, deservedly reputed the quickest witted Man of the Age. These two Referees took a Security signed by Ali and Moawiyah, and both the Armies, for themselves and their Families, that all should contribute their Assistance, to ratify and confirm what they should agree upon, which was to be determined [2] the next Ramadân. This agreed upon, Ali retired to Cufah, and Moawiyah to Damascus, leaving each of them the Command of their several Armies to one of their Generals, and the Authority of Things relating to Religion in the Hands of a particular Imâm. But as soon as Ali came to Cufah, Twelve Thousand of those that could read the Alcoran reproached him with his base Submission to this Accommodation, as having out of Fear of temporal Calamity submitted to the Determination of Men, when the Alcoran expresly says, that Judgement belongeth to God alone.

Eight Months after the Battel of Seffein, the two Arbitrators met in a [3] Place which lieth between

[2] This Agreement was signed on Wednesday the 13th of the Month Saphar, in the Year 37. [3] Dumat al jondel.

tween Meccah, Cufah, and Syria. There came along with them ſeveral of the Sahabah, or Companions of the Prophet. Ebn Abbas bad Abu Muſa remember this, whatſoever elſe he forgot; that Ali had no Blemiſh to render him incapable of the Government, nor Moawiyah any Virtue to qualify him for it. Amrou, who knew very well the Genius of his Partner, treated him with the utmoſt Civility and Reſpect, till at laſt he had inſinuated himſelf ſo far into him, as to make him believe, that it would be altogether impracticable ever to bring Things to an Accommodation, without depoſing both theſe Competitors, and leaving the Choice of a Third to the People. This important Article once fixed, they erected a Tribunal between both the Armies, from which each of the Umpires was publickly to declare his Opinion. Abu Muſa would have had Amrou gone up firſt, but he alledged ſo many Reaſons why he ought to give him the Preference, that at laſt he over-perſwaded him.

ALI. An. Heg. 37. cœpit Jun. 13. A. C. 657.

Then Abu Muſa going up firſt, pronounced theſe Words with a loud Voice: I depoſe Ali and Moawiyah from the Chaliphate (or Government) to which they pretend, after the the ſame Manner as I take this Ring from my Finger. Having made this Declaration, he immediately came down. Then Amrou went up and ſaid, You have heard how how Abu Muſa has for his Part depoſed Ali; as for my Part I depoſe him too, and I give the Chaliphate to Moawiyah, and inveſt him with it after the ſame Manner as I put this Ring upon my Finger, and this I do with ſo much the more Juſtice, becauſe he is Othman's Heir and Avenger, and the worthieſt of all Men to ſucceed him.

ALI. An. Heg. 37. Apit Jun. 18. C. C. 657.

After this Publication, Ali's Party, aſhamed and confounded at this unexpected Succeſs, began to complain grievouſly of Abu Muſa. He for his own Part accuſed Amrou of not having performed the Agreement made between them. From Complaints they came to ill Language, and in ſhort, Abu Muſa, aſhamed of his Arbitration, and juſtly fearing Ali's Diſpleaſure, beſides, not thinking himſelf ſafe in the Army, took his Flight, and retired to Meccah. This Abu Muſa was celebrated for the moſt harmonious Voice that ever was heard; it is ſaid, that his Common Diſcourſe was perfect Melody.

The Syrians went back to Moawiyah, and wiſhed him Joy: And from that Time Ali's Intereſt began to decline, and Moawiyah's increaſed daily. The two oppoſite Parties not only curſed one another, but carried the Matter ſo far as to come to a mutual ſolemn Excommunication, which was always pronounced when they made any Harangue to the People in the Moſque, and continued a long time between the the Houſe of Ali and that of Ommiyah, of which were Othman and Moawiyah. ALI. An. Heg. 37. cœpit Jun. 18. A.C. 657.

Before we proceed any further, we muſt here obſerve, that when the Treaty of Peace that followed the Suſpenſion of Arms between Ali and Moawiyah was a writing, the Secretary began with theſe Words. Ali, Chief and Commander, General of the Muſlemans, agrees to a Peace with Moawiyah upon theſe following Terms. Moawiyah having read theſe firſt Words, ſaid, Certainly I ſhould be a very wicked Man indeed, if I ſhould make War upon him, whom I acknowledge to be the Chief, and Commander General of the Faithful.

[9] Upon this, Amrou Ebno'l Aſi ſaid, that it was abſolutely neceſſary to blot out that Title of Chief, or Emperor of the Faithful. Ahnaf the Son of Kais, addreſſing himſelf to Ali, ſaid, that he ought by no means to ſuffer himſelf to be deprived of that Title. Ali told him, that when he was formerly Secretary to his Father-in-law Mahomet, he had himſelf drawn up Articles of Peace between him and Sohail, who had revolted againſt him. That upon his having intituled Mahomet, Apoſtle and Meſſenger of God; Sohail ſaid to him, If I had acknowledged your Father-in-law for the Apoſtle and Meſſenger of God, I ſhould never have had any Peace to ſign with him, for I would never have made any War. I acquainted Mahomet with this Difficulty, who answered me, Make no Scruple of blotting out that Title; that doth not depend upon this Treaty, Time will discover the Truth of that; and remember, that there will come a Day when you shall find your self in the same Case. Ali therefore gave his Consent, that for that Time they should omit that Title, of which his Arbitrator, Abu Musa, as we have seen already, solemnly deprived him. All these things were transacted in the 37th Year of the Hegirah, or Flight of Mahomet, and of our Saviour the 657th. As also the Revolt of the Karegites, or Separatists, who this Year made an Insurrection against Ali.

[9] D'Herbelot. Ebno'l Athîr.

ALI. An. Heg. 37. cœpit Jun. 18. A. C. 657.

The Occasion of their Revolt was, that Ali having put his Affairs into the Hands of two Arbitrators, as we have already seen, some of the Irakians told him, that he had done exceeding Wrong, in referring that to the Judgment of Men, which ought to be determined by God alone. That instead of standing to the Peace that he had made, he ought to pursue his Enemies, who also were the Enemies of God, without Quarter. Ali answered, that having once passed his Word, he was obliged to keep it; and that in this he followed what the Law of God prescribed. These People answered him, that there was no other Judge or Arbitrator between him and and Moawiyah but God alone: That what he had done was a Sin, and that he ought to repent of it. ALI. An. Heg. 37. cœpit Jun. 18. A. C. 657.

[6] Ali remonſtrated to them with a great deal of Vigour, that the Sin lay at their Door, in ſhewing ſo much Inconſtancy and Stubborneſs. That they ought to remember, that when Moawiyah cauſed the Alcorans to be carried at the Head of the two Armies, he gave them Notice that it was only a Trick of their Enemies, yet nevertheleſs they had left off fighting without his Order; and that in ſhort, it was very injurious in them, to preſs him to the Breach of a Treaty, which they themſelves had obliged him to ſign.

The Rebels, not at all ſatisfied with theſe Reaſons, choſe for their Captain Abdollah, the Son of Waheb, who appointed Naharwan (a Town between Bagdad and Waſet, four Miles Eaſt of the River Tigris) for the Place of their Rendezvous. Thither came all Ali's Male-contents, whereof there was a great Number from Cufah, Baſorah and Arabia.

Ali took little Notice of them at firſt, his Thoughts being more taken up about Moawiyah, whom he conſidered as the much more formidable Enemy; but being informed that they were already increaſed to the Number of Five and twenty Thousand Men, that they Condemned all Persons as impious that did not fall in with their Sentiments, and that they had already put to Death several Muslemans, for refusing to comply with their Measures; he resolved in fine to exterminate a Sect, which tended to the Subversion of the very Foundations of Muslemanism. However he chose rather to gain them by Gentleness, and bring them back to their Duty by good Advice; but that means proving too weak, he employs the Forces of a considerable Army, at the head of which he presented himself to their View. Nevertheless he made use of this Artifice before he began the Battel; namely to plant a Standard without the Camp, and make Proclamation with sound of Trumpet, that whosoever would come under it should have good Quarter; and if any of them would retire to Cufah, they should there find a Sanctuary.

[6] D'Herbelot.

ALI. An. Heg. 38. cœpit Jun. 8. A. C. 658.

This Stratagem succeeded well for Ali. For the Army of the Karegites dispersed it self in a very little time of its own Accord; and Abdollah the Son of Wahab found himself reduced to Four Thousand Men only. However this Arch-Rebel was resolved, with this small Number of Men, to signalize his Bravery by a desperate Attempt. For he attacked Ali's Army, notwithstanding the inequality of his Forces. But his Rashness was duly punished, he and all his Men were were cut to Pieces, Nine only excepted, which which was the same Number that Ali had lost in all.

ALI. An. Heg. 38. cœpit Jun. 8. A. C. 658.

A little before this Fight, Ali had foretold to his Friends what would be the Event. You see, says he, these People who make Profession of reading the Alcoran, without observing its Commandments, they will quit the Profession which they make of their Sect, as quick as Arrows fly from the Bow when they are shot off.

This Victory, which was gained in the Thirty eighth Year of the Hegirah, having reunited all the Arabians under the Government of Ali; there remained nothing else to be done, but to reduce the Syrians. Ali was for marching against Moawiyah immediately after the Victory. But some of his great Men represented to him, that it would be proper to give his Army some Refreshment, that every one might make Preparation for a War, which it was plain would be more long winded than the former. Ali followed their Advice, and formed his Camp at Nakilah, not far from Cufah, where he made Proclamation, that during the time of his Encampment in that Place, any one that had any Business to do in Town, might go for one Day, and return the next; that they might be the sooner in a readiness for their Expedition into Syria. The effect of the Publication of this Order was, that the Camp was entirely forsaken; and the General finding himself left alone, was obliged to go back to Cufah too, as well as the rest.

ALI. An. Heg. 38. cœpit Jun. 8. A. C. 658.

Ali, at the beginning of his Chaliphate, had conferred the Government of Ægypt upon Saad the Son of Kais; who acquitted himself of his Charge with abundance of Prudence. For there being in Ægypt a great Faction of Othman's Partisans, he knew how to accommodate himself to the Time, and managed them with great Address. This Conduct of Saad furnished Moawiyah with an occasion of publishing it all abroad, that this Governor was his Friend, and acted in concert with him. These Reports he spread round about, on purpose to raise a Suspicion of him in Ali, who nevertheless had no better Friend belonging to him. [3] To forward the Matter, Moawiyah forged a Letter in Saad's Name, directed to himself; wherein was insinuated, that the Reason why he had not attacked the Party of the Othmanians, was because he was entirely in his Measures. This Device of Moawiyah had its desired Effect: For as soon as the News reached Ali's Ears, he recalled Saad from his Government, and sent in his room Mahomet the Son of Abubeker the first Caliph, which was the cause of new Troubles in that Country; for Mahomet had no sooner set foot in Ægypt,

[3] Abulpheda.

but

ALI. An. Heg. 38. cœpit Jun. 8. A. C. 658.

but he began to chaſe out of it all thoſe who pretended to have had any tye of Friendſhip with Othman, or to preſerve any Reſpect for his Memory.

Wherefore after his Arrival, there was nothing but Diſſenſions and civil Wars, and theſe Diſorders grew to ſuch a height, that Ali was obliged to ſend Malec Shutur who is ſometimes called Uſhtur Malec, to reſtore his Authority there. But Moawiyah, who had notice of the ſending of this new Governor, dealt with a Countryman that lived upon the Confines of Arabia and Ægypt, and at whoſe Houſe Uſhtur Malec was to lodge, to give him Poiſon in the Entertainment which he had prepared for him.

This Man, an old Friend of Moawiyah's, punctually executed his Orders, and gave him ſome poiſoned Honey to ſup; of which he died before he ſtirred out of his Houſe. [9] As ſoon as Moawiyah heard it, he ſaid, Verily God hath Armies of Honey! Then he diſpatched Amrou Ben Alâs with Six Thouſand Horſe to take Poſſeſſion of the Government of Ægypt in his Name; who made ſuch ſpeed that in a few Days he came up to the Capital City; there he joined Ben Sharig the Chief of Othman's Party; and and they two marched together to engage Mahomet the Son of Abubeker, who as yet retained the Name and Authority of Governor for Ali. Mahomet was routed, and fell into his Enemies Hands alive; who quickly killed him, and, incloſing his dead Body in that of an Aſs, burnt him to Aſhes. [4] As ſoon as Ayeſha heard of the Death of her Brother Mahomet, ſhe took it extremely to Heart, and kneeled down, at the end of all her Prayers, to beg a Curſe upon Moawiyah and Amrou, and took Mahomet's Domeſticks and Dependants into her care. Ali was very much concerned and ſaid, We ſhall reckon for him before God. All this Year there was a continued Succeſſion of Incurſions made into Ali's Territories, who was all this while daily employed in making eloquent Speeches, and moving his Army to go againſt Moawiyah, but could make no Impreſſion upon them to the Purpoſe.

[9] Abulpheda.

ALI. An. Heg. 38. cœpit Jun. 8. A. C. 658.

[5] Ali being informed of all this bad News, ſent for Abdallah, the Son of Abbas, from Baſorah, where he was Governor, that he might comfort himſelf with his Converſation, and they might take ſuch Reſolutions together as were moſt convenient for the bad Condition of their Affairs. Abdallah having firſt conſtituted Ziyád his Lieutenant in Baſorah, came to Ali, and once again promiſed him inviolable Fidelity. Moawiyah, who was always watchful to make his Advantage of all Opportunities, was no ſooner

[4] Abulpheda. [5] D'Herbelot.

in-

ALI.
An. Heg. 39.
cœpit Maii 28.
A. C. 659.

informed that Ben Abbàs had left Baſorah, but he ſent one Abdallah, ſurnamed Hadrami, with two thouſand Horſe to ſeize that Place.

Ziyád, who had not Troops ſufficient to ſtand againſt Abdallah, left the City to him, and informed Ali of the preſſing Neceſſity he was under of having ſpeedy Succours ſent him, that at leaſt he might be able to keep the Field. Ali ſent him ſome under the Command of Hareth, who arrived ſo ſeaſonably that Abdallah was beaten and killed in the Battel, which was fought near Baſorah. Upon this the City ſurrendered it ſelf to Ali's Government, who immediately ſent back Abdallah Ben Abbas, to take the Command of it as he had done before. This was in the 38th Year of the Hegirah.

[1] The next Year paſſed over without any conſiderable Adventures; for the Syrians, weary of the War, enterprized nothing againſt the Arabians, and the Arabians had enough to do to preſerve themſelves. In the beginning of this Year, Abdallah Ben Abbás, Lieutenant of Baſorah, ſent Ziyád to take upon him the Government of Perſia, which was put into great Diſorder upon the Account of theſe Commotions between Ali and Moawiyah. He behaved himſelf ſo well in that Poſt, and managed ſo much to the Satisfaction of the People, that the Per-

[1] Abulpheda.

ſians

ALI. An. Heg. 40. cœpit Maii 16. A. C. 660.

ſians ſaid, they had never met with any Adminiſtration ſince the Days of Anuſherwan equal to that of this Arabian. This Anuſherwan was ſurnamed the Juſt, he was the Son of Hormiſdas King of the Perſians, and reigned contemporary with Mauritius and Phocas. Mahomet was born in his Reign, as he ſays himſelf in the Alcoran, I was born in the Days of the Juſt King.

[2] This was but a ſhort Ceſſation, for in the beginning of the fortieth Year Moawiyah began to rouze, and ſent Ben Arthah with three Thouſand Horſe towards that Province of Arabia called Hejaz, to ſeize upon its two principal Towns, Meccah and Medinah, where he had always kept a Correſpondence ever ſince Othman's Death, and by this Means to open himſelf a Way into Yemen, or Arabia the Happy. Ali's two Governours quitted each of them their reſpective Charges upon his Approach, for want of Forces ſufficient to make a Defence. So that Ben Arthah made the Inhabitants take the Oath of Allegiance to Moawiyah. He ſhed ſome Blood at Medinah, which gave the People an Averſion to Moawiyah's Government; and proceeded in his March to Arabia Fœlix, where he put ſome Thouſands to the Sword.

All this while Moawiyah was in Syria at Damaſcus, and Ali at Cufah. Ali always prayed

[2] An Heg. 40. cœpit Maii 16. A. C. 660.

pub-

ALI.
An. Heg. 40.
cæpit Maii 16.
A. C. 656.

publickly for Moawiyah, Amrou and Dehoc. Moawiyah on the other ſide prayed for Ali, Haſan and Hoſein.

[4] Abidollah foreſeeing very well that he ſhould be viſited by Ben Arthah, made the beſt Preparation he was able, but to no purpoſe. He made a Shift to eſcape himſelf, but left two little Boys behind him, both which Ben Arthah barbarouſly murdered. This Cruelty not only occaſioned great Grief to the Father, but raiſed a juſt Abhorrence in every Body elſe. Ali was extremely touched, and curſed the Author of ſuch an horrible Outrage, begging of God to take away his Senſes and Underſtanding. They ſay, that towards the latter End of his Days he did really turn Fool, and was always calling for his Sword, which his Friends perceiving, gave him one made of Wood, and another hollow one full of Air; and that this poor Wretch imagined that ſo many Blows as he ſtruck with his wooden Sword againſt the other, he killed ſo many Men.

However, Ali did not omit the ſending Jariyah to purſue Ben Arthah with four Thouſand

[4] D' Herbelot is here miſtaken, for it was not, as he ſuppoſes, Abdollah Ben Abbás, who was Governor of Baſorah; but Abidollah, Governor of Yeman, whom, as we have before noted, Ali put into that Lieutenancy at his firſt coming to the Chaliphate. Beſides, how ſhould the Governor of Baſorah receive a Viſit from him in his Return from Arabia Fælix into Syria?

Horſe;

ALI. An. Heg. 40. cæpit Maii 16. A. C. 660.

Horſe; but he had ſcarce ſet out towards Yemen, when the other was returning into Syria. At the ſame Time another great Calamity befel Ali, for his Brother Okail went over to Moawiyah, who received him with open Arms, and aſſigned him large Revenues. Okail alledged no other Pretence for his Deſertion, but only that his Brother Ali had not entertained him according to his Quality.

A little after the Battle of Naharwan, three Karegites of thoſe that were the moſt zealous for the Advancement of their Sect, met together at Meccah, and making frequent mention among themſelves of thoſe that were killed in that Battel; magnified their Merit and bewailed their Loſs. Theſe three Men, Abdarrahmàn the Son of Melgem, Barak the Son of Abdollah, whom ſome Surname Turk, and Amrou the Son of Beker, ſaid one to the other, If Ali, Moawiyah and Amrou the Son of Aáſi, theſe erroneous Imàms, were dead, the Affairs of the Muſlemans would be in a good Condition. Immediately the firſt of them ſaid to his Companions, For my part, if you will, I will give you a good Account of Ali. The ſecond hearing this Diſcourſe, ſaid he would undertake to make a good riddance of Moawiyah; and the third promiſed the other two, to kill Amrou Ben Alaſi. Theſe three Men that were thus de-devoted to execute their Design unanimously, pitched upon a Friday, (the Day of the solemn Assembly of the Muslemans) which fell upon the seventeenth of the Month Ramadan: And after having poisoned their Swords, every Man took his Road; the first that to Cufah, the second that to Damascus, and the third that to Ægypt.

ALI. An. Heg. 40. cœpit Maii 16. A. C. 660.

Barak, one of the three Devotees being arrived at Damascus, struck Moawiyah in the Reins, but the Wound was not mortal. The Surgeon that was called to see him, after having searched and considered it; gave him his choice, either to be Cauterized, or drink a Portion that should render him incapable of Generation. Moawiyah without any Hesitation chose the latter, and did in reality remain the rest of his Days without having any other Children besides those which were born to him before he received his Wound.

The Assassin, who was instantly seized, discovered the Conspiracy which he had made with his two Comrades, and was condemned to have his Hands and Feet cut off, and be suffered to live. He did live, and it is said he married afterwards. But one of Moawiyah's Friends being informed of it, said that it was by no means reasonable, that that Assassin who had hindered Moawiyah from having Children, should ſhould have any of his own; and ſo killed him with his own Hands.

ALI. An. Heg. 40. cæpit Maii 16. A. C. 656.

Amrou Ben Beker the ſecond of the Conſpirators was in Ægypt, on Friday the ſeventeenth of the Month Ramadan, the Day appointed to ſtrike his Blow; Amrou Ben Aláſi was then (fortunately for him) troubled with a fit of the Cholick, which hindered him from performing the Office of Imám in the Moſque that Day. Wherefore he appointed another, who ſupplied his Place, and fell down dead with the Blow, which the Aſſaſſin, who miſtook him for Amrou, gave him. This ſame Aſſaſſin, as he was led to Execution, ſaid without any concern, I deſigned Amrou, but God deſigned another. [8] Other Authors ſay, that when he was brought before Amrou, he aſked who that was. They told him Amrou: Whom then, ſaid he, have I killed? They anſwered Charijah. Then Amrou ſaid to him, You meant Amrou, but God meant Charijah.

[9] The third of theſe Conſpirators, Abdarrahmàn, had better Succeſs in the Execution of his wicked Deſign againſt Ali, than his other two Companions. For being arrived at Cufah, he took up his Lodgings at a Woman's Houſe, whoſe neareſt Relations had been killed at the the Battel of Naharwàn, and who for that Reaſon retained in her Heart a ſtrong deſire of being

[8] Abulpheda. [9] D' Herbelot.

ALI.
An. Heg. 40. cœpit Maii 16. A. C. 656.

ing revenged upon Ali. Abdarrahman finding this Woman in a Diſpoſition ſo favourable to his Deſign; uſed his utmoſt Efforts to gain her Favour, at the ſame time making her ſome Overtures of Marriage, to which ſhe anſwered: The Dowry which I will have of the Man that Marries me, ſhall be three Thouſand Drachms of Silver, a Slave, a Maid, and Ali's Head. Abdorrahman inſtantly accepted the Conditions. And at the time when he undertook to put his Deſign in Execution, ſhe joined two other Men with him whoſe Names were [8] Derwan and Sheith to bear him Company.

Ali, during all this Month of Ramadan in which he was killed, had ſeveral Preſages of his Death, and uſed between times to let drop ſome words to that purpoſe when he was in private among his Friends. He was heard once to ſay, after he had undergone a great deal of Uneaſineſs; Alas! my Heart, there is need of Patience, for there is no remedy againſt Death! In ſhort, Friday the ſeventeenth of this Month being come, he went out of his Houſe early in the Morning to go to the Moſque, and it was obſerved that a great Number of Houſhold Birds made a great Noiſe as he paſſed through his Yard; and [8] Abulpheda ſays, Werdan and Shabib. The ſame Letters may be read for both. D'Herbelot ſeems to have read it in Perſian, in which writing w is like d, and ſometimes r. But Werdan and Shabib are the right Names.

that

ALI. An. Heg. 60. cœpit Maii 40. A. C. 656.

that one of his Slaves having thrown a Cudgel at them to make them quiet, he ſaid to them, Let them alone, for their Cries are only Lamentations foreboding my Death.

As ſoon as he came into the Moſque theſe three Villains, who waited for him, pretended to quarrel among themſelves, and drew their Swords.

[8] Derwán made a Blow at Ali, but miſſed him, and the Blow fell upon the Gate of the Moſque. Abdarrahmàn ſtruck him upon the Head, juſt in the ſame place where he had received a Wound before in the Battel of Ahzàb, which was fought in Mahomet's time, and that Stroke was mortal. The three Aſſaſſins had time to make their Eſcape, without being Apprehended. [9] Derwàn crept home; where a Man who had ſeen him with Sword in Hand againſt Ali, went and killed him. Shabib betook him to his Heels, and ran ſo well, that he was never taken. Abdarrahmàn concealed himſelf for ſome time; and when Ali was aſked who was the Author of ſuch an enormous Attempt againſt his Perſon, he anſwered, You ſhall ſoon hear Tidings of him. In ſhort, a Muſleman having found Abdarrahmàn hid in a Corner, with his Sword in his Hand, aſked him if it was not he that had wounded Ali; the Aſſaſſin, willing to deny it, was

[8] Werdàn. [9] Werdan.

ALI.
An. Heg. 40.
cœpit Maii 16.
A. C. 660.

was constrained by his own Conscience to confess it; and was instantly brought before Ali. Ali delivered him in Custody to his eldest Son Hasan, with Orders to let him want nothing, and that if he died of his Wound, he should execute his Murderer at one Stroke only. Hasan punctually obeyed his Father's Orders, who died the 19th, or 20th, or 21st of the same Month, that is, the third, fourth, or fifth Day after he was wounded. This is the Account that the learned D'Herbelot gives of the Death of that Murderer out of his Persian Authors, as I suppose. [5] Tábari and Abulpheda, Authors of great Account among the Arabians, relate it after a quite different manner. Abulpheda says, "That "his Hand was cut off first, and then his Foot "on the opposite Side: Next they put out his "Eyes with a red hot Iron, then cut out his "Tongue, and afterwards burnt him," to which he adds, the Curse of God be upon him. This Account I take to be much the more probable, considering the heinousness of the Crime, and the Temper of that People. For though it is not at all improbable that Ali might give such Orders, yet I can by no means be induced to believe that they were ever so mercifully executed. After what manner soever he was put to Death, the Hereticks look upon him as a Martyr.

[5] Abulpheda.

ALI. An. Heg. 40. cœpit Maii 16. A. C. 660.

As to Ali's Age Authors differ, some say he was sixty-three, others fifty-six, and some fifty-nine. The Time of his Caliphate was five Years bating three Months; they are not agreed as to the Place of his Burial: Some say he was buried opposite to the Mosque in Cufah; others in the Royal Palace; others say, that his Son Hasan convey'd him to Medinah, and laid him by his Wife Phatemah. [2] The most probable Opinion is, that he was buried in that Place which is visited by the Muslemans to this Day as his Tomb, where there are a great many Oblations left by the Devotees.

As to his Person, he had a very red Face, large Eyes, a prominent Belly, a bald Head, a large Beard, very hairy upon the Breast, rather short than middle-sized; of a very good Look, florid and youthful, frequently smiling. He had in all nine Wives, the first of which was Fathemah, Mahomet's Daughter, during whose Life he married no other. By her he had three Children, Hasan, Hosein and Mohassan; this last died in his Infancy.

[3] The second was Omm-al Nebiyin, by whom he had four Children, Abdollah, Abbàs, Othman and Jaasar, who were all four killed at the Battle of Kerbelah.

[2] Abulpheda says, that in this Opinion he chuses to follow Ebno'l Athrîr. [3] D'Herbelot.

His

ALI.
An. Heg. 40.
cœpit Jun. 16.
A. C. 660.

His third Wife, named Aſimah, was the Mother of Jahya and Aoun.

The fourth, whoſe Name was Omm-habibah, was the Mother of Omar.

The ſixth, whoſe Name was Caulah, was the Mother of Mohammed Ben Haniphiyah, of whom we ſhall give a further Account in the Sequel of the Hiſtory.

I find no further particular mention of the Names of the reſt of his Wives; there are three more Sons, Mahomet the younger, and Amrou, who were born of ſome one or other of them.

Though here are but fourteen Sons mentioned here, it is certain he had fifteen, whereof only five left any Poſterity behind them; namely, Haſan, Hoſein, Mohammed Ben Haniphyah, Abbas and Amrou. As for the number of his Daughters they reckon eighteen.

This particular Account of his Family may ſeem ſuperfluous to ſome, but not to thoſe that conſider what great Changes and Revolutions have been made by it in the ſeveral ſucceeding Generations of the Muſlemans, and of what Importance it is throughout the whole courſe of their Hiſtory.

They report ſtrange things of Ali. One thing very particularly obſervable is, that his Mother was delivered of him in the very Temple itſelf of Meccah; which never happened to any one elſe. The Name that his mother gave him firſt, was Caid: But Mahomet his Couſin-German changed it into Ali.

ALI. An. Heg. 40. cœpit Maii 16. A. C. 660.

[4]Among the Surnames, or honourable Titles, which the Muſlemans beſtow upon Ali, there are two principal ones; the firſt of which is Wâſi, which ſignifies in Arabick, Legatee, Mandatary, Executor of a Man's Will, and Heir, that is of Mahomet. His ſecond Title is [5] Mortada, or Mortadi, which ſignifies beloved by, or acceptable to God. They called him even whilſt he was alive Eſed Allâh algalib, The victorious Lion of God; to which may be added Haidar, which alſo in the Arabick Language ſignifies a Lion. The Shii, who are his Followers, or rather his Adorers, frequently call him Faid alanwâr, The Diſtributer of Lights or Graces. And in Perſian, Shah Mordman, the King of Men, and Shîr Khoda, the Lion of God.

The greateſt Part of the Muſlemans pretend, that Ali was the firſt that embraced that Religion. And according to their Tradition he was indeed a very early Muſleman, for it ſeems he made Profeſſion of that Religion in his Mother's Womb. For all the time that ſhe was big of him he hindered her from proſtrating herſelf

[4] D'Herbelot. [5] From whence it is that our European Travellers corruptly call him Mortis Ali, which the Readers take to have been his Name.

before

before her Idol which she used to worship. The Form of Benediction, or Blessing, which they always add when they name him, is, God glorify the Face of him. They say, moreover, that Mahomet, talking of him, said, Ali is for me, and I am for him; he stands to me in the same Rank as Aaron did to Moses; I am the Town in which all Knowledge is shut up, and he is the Gate of it.

ALI. An. Heg. 40. cœpit Maii 16. A. C. 660.

However, these great Elogies did not hinder his Name, and that of all his Family, from being cursed, and their Persons excommunicated through all the Mosques of the Empire of the Caliphs of the House of Ommiyah, down from Moawiyah to the time of Omar Ebn Abdalaziz, who suppressed this solemn Malediction. There were besides several of the Caliphs of the House of Abbas, who expressed a great Aversion to Ali and all his Posterity; such as Mótaded and Motawákkel, to whom he is reported to have appeared in their Sleep and threatned with his indignation. On the contrary, the Fatemite Caliphs of Ægypt made his Name to be added to that of Mahomet in the Publication of the Times of Prayer, which they make on the Turrets of the Mosques.

It is said, that the Sepulchre of Ali was kept hid during all the Reign of the Family of Ommiyah, and not discovered till under the Reign of the Abbaſides, which is not credible. Adhaude-daulat in the Year 367, of Chriſt 977, built a ſumptuous Monument over it, which the Perſians generally call Konbud Faïd alanwar, The Dome of the Diſpenſer of Lights and Graces. Now notwithſtanding the Sepulchre of Ali is ſo very well known, near the City of Cufah, there are ſome of his Sect who believe him to be ſtill alive, and affirm, that he ſhall come at the end of the World, and fill the Earth with Juſtice. There are ſome among them ſo extravagant as to make him a Divine Perſon. The more moderate ſay, that he is not truly God, but that in a great many Things he partakes of the Divine Nature.

ALI. An. Heg. 16. cœpit Maii 40. A. C. 656.

Ali has a great Reputation for his Wiſdom among all the Mahometans. There is extant of his a Centiloquium, or a hundred Sentences, which have been tranſlated out of Arabick into Turkiſh and Perſian. There is likewiſe a Collection of Verſes under the Title of Anwar Alokail. We have in the Bodleian Library a large Book of his Sentences, a Specimen whereof we ſhall annex to this Hiſtory. But the moſt celebrated Piece of all is intituled Jefr we Jame; it is written upon Parchment in myſterious Characters intermixed with Figures, wherein are couched all the grand Events that are to happen from the Beginning of Muſlemaniſm to the end of the World.

ALI. An. Heg. 40. cœpit Maii 16. A. C. 660.

World. This Parchment is depoſited in the Hands of thoſe of his Family, and even to this Time no body has decyphered it in any ſort of manner but Jaafer Sadek. For, as for the entire Explication of it, that is reſerved for the twelfth Imàm, who is ſurnamed by way of Excellence, the Mohdi or Grand Director.

Beſides theſe Books which we have been ſpeaking of, we find in Authors ſeveral Sentences and Apophthegms, under the Name of Ali. The Author of Rabi alakyar quotes this, which is one of the moſt inſtructive; He that would be rich without Means, powerful without Subjects, and Subject without a Maſter; hath nothing to do but to leave off ſinning and ſerve God; and he will find theſe three things. One of his Captains having aſked him one Day with impudence enough, what was the Reaſon that the Reigns of Abubeker and Omar his Predeceſſors were ſo peaceable, and that of Othman and his own were ſo full of Troubles and Diviſions; Ali anſwered him very wiſely: The Reaſon is plain, it is becauſe Othman and I ſerved Abubeker and Omar during their Reign: And Othman and I found no body to ſerve us but you, and ſuch as are like you.

Some body told him one Day, that Moawiyah ſaid, that Ali and thoſe of his Houſe diſtinguiſhed themſelves by their Bravery; Zobéir and his Family made a noiſe with their Magnificence; but that for his own Part and his Family's, they did not pretend to diſtinguiſh themſelves from others, by any thing but their Humanity and Clemency. Ali anſwered thoſe that told him, that it looked as if Moawiyah had made uſe of Artifice in this Diſcourſe, as if he had a mind to ſpur on Zobéir and him with their Magnificence and Bravery; to the End, that the one throwing himſelf into a vaſt Expence, and the other into Hazards, they might not be in a Condition to oppoſe his Uſurpation: And he would gain the Affection of the People, by boaſting of the Sweetneſs of his Temper.

ALI. An. Heg. 40. cœpit Maii 16. A. C. 660.

There is beſides in the Book Intituled Rabi alakyar another Maxim of Ali, which is very memorable, and very contrary to the Conduct of thoſe who vaunt themſelves upon the account of their being of his Sect. Take great care, ſaid he, never to ſeparate your ſelves from the Fellowſhip of the other Muſlemans: For he that ſeparates himſelf from them belongs to the Devil, as the Sheep that leave the Flock belong to the Wolf. Therefore give no Quarter to him who marches under the Standard of Schiſm, though he has my Turbant upon his Head, for he carries along with him the infallible Mark of a Man that is out of the way. It ſhould be remarked here by the way that thoſe of the Sect of Ali have not only a

ALI.
An. Heg. 40. cœpit Maii 16. A. C. 660.

a Turbant made after a particular Fashion, but that [2] they also twist their Hair after a manner quite different from the rest of the Muslemans.

Hosain Waez also recites this Passage of Ali, in his Paraphrase and Commentary upon the Alcoran; God hath given Men two Imàms, that is to say, two Pontifs or Mediators between him and them. The first is the Prophet who is gone, and is no more among them. The second which remains and shall continue always with them is the Prayer, which they make to obtain pardon of Sins.

Ali's Sectaries are called by the Muslemans, (who intitle themselves Sonnites, that is Observers of the Tradition, or Orthodox) by the scandalous Name of Shii, a Name that is formed from that of Shiyah, which signifies properly a scandalous reprobate Sect. For a Sect that follows approved Opinions, is called by the Arabs Medheb: But these Sectaries of Ali, of whom we are speaking, do not call themselves by that Name. On the contrary, they apply it to their Adversaries, and call their own Sect Adáliyah, which signifies the Religion of them that follow Justice and the right Side.

There have been some of these Partisans of Ali dispersed throughout all the Countries of the the Empire of the Muslemans, who have from time to time raiſed very great Diſturbances. They have poſſeſſed ſeveral Eſtates both in Aſia and Africa: At this Day all the great Empire of the Perſians, and one half of the Princes of the Uzbecks, whoſe Dominions lye beyond the River Gihon, and ſome Mahometan Kings of the Indies made Profeſſion of this Sect.

[2] D'Herbelot.

time

ALI. An. Heg. 40. cœpit Maii 16. A. C. 660.

Theſe are the principle Memoirs relating to that great Caliph; who, laying aſide all thoſe impertinent fabulous Stories which they tell of him, was, if he be conſidered with regard to his Courage, Temper, Piety and Underſtanding, one of the greateſt Men that was ever born in that Nation. The Inſcription of his Seal was, The Kingdom belongs to the Only the Mighty God.

HASAN.

The Fifth from MAHOMET.

HASAN. An. Heg. 40. cœpit Maii 16. A. C. 660.

AFter Ali had received his mortal Wound, and there was no room left for any Hopes of Recovery; his Friends that were about him enquired of him whom he would nominate for his Succeſſor. He told them, that he intended, with regard to that Affair, to follow the Example of the Apoſtle of God, who did not nominate any Succeſſor. That if it did pleaſe God to favour them, he would undoubtedly unite their Judgments in the making a good Choice. So it fell of Courſe without any Scruple to his eldeſt Son Haſan, a Man that inherited more of his Father's Piety than his Courage; and was reverenced not only upon the account of his near Relation to Ali, but becauſe he was very ſtudious of the practical Part of Religion, and accounted by all a very good Man.

[4] As ſoon as his Father Ali was dead, Haſan, it belonging properly to him as eldeſt Son to perform that Office, ſtood up and ſaid to the People; You have killed a Man (meaning his Father) on that ſame Night in which the Alcoran came down from Heaven, and Iſa (Jeſus) upon whom be Peace, was lifted up to Heaven, and in which Joſhua the Son of Nun was killed; by God, none of his Predeceſſors exceeded him, nor will any of his Succeſſors ever be equal to him. [2] After this they proceeded to his Inauguration, which was begun by Kais in this Form. Stretch out your Hand, as a Token that you will ſtand by the Book of God, and the Tradition of the Apoſtle, and make War againſt all Oppoſers. Haſan anſwered, As to the Book of God and the Tradition of the Apoſtle, for they will ſtand. Then the reſt came in, with whom he ſtipulated, that they ſhould be ſubject and obedient to him, and be at Peace with his Friends, and at War with his Enemies: But ſome of the Irakians, who were quite weary of the Syrian War, heſitated at that Condition, and ſaid, This Man will never ſerve you for a Maſter, we are for no fighting.

[4] Ebno'l Athîr.

form

HASAN. An. Heg. 40. cœpit Maii 16. A. C. 660.

'Tis ſaid, that notwithſtanding the remiſſneſs of the greater Part, forty (and ſome ſay ſixty) Thouſand of Ali's Men had bound themſelves in an Aſſociation before he was murdered, to ſtand by him to Death, and that he was making Preparation to march at the Head of them. With this truſty Body of his Father's Troops, Haſan was perſwaded, contrary to his own Inclination, to inſiſt upon his Right, and renew the Diſpute with Moawiyah, who had Syria, Paleſtine and Ægypt in his Poſſeſſion, and was proclaimed Caliph in thoſe Countries, even before Ali was killed, and refuſed to acknowledge Haſan's Title, becauſe he accuſed him of having been an Accomplice in the Murder of Othman. HASAN. An. Heg. 40. cœpit Maii 16. A. C. 660.

[2] Abulpheda.

pa-

Haſan was by no manner of means qualified for ſuch an Undertaking, being naturally of a moſt peaceable Diſpoſition, and who looked upon the Effuſion of Muſleman Blood with the greateſt Horror imaginable; but over-perſwaded he ſet upon his March, having ſent Kais before him with twelve Thouſand Men. Moawiyah was already upon his March towards them, and after a Skirmiſh between Kais and the Syrians, they reſted in Expectation of Haſan's Arrival. [1] When Haſan came to Madayan, there happened a Tumult in his Army, occaſioned by the ſudden Murder of one of his Men, which was no ſooner proclaimed, but the whole Hoſt was in ſuch an Uproar, that without any Regard to his Diſtinction, he was not only juſtled from his Seat, but received a Wound. Upon this he retired into Madayen Caſtle, where the Go-

[1] Ebno'l Athîr.

ver-

HASAN. An. Heg. 40. capit Maii 6. A.C. 661.

vernour's Nephew propoſed to his Uncle to put him in Irons, and make a Preſent of him to Moawiyah: His Uncle gave him an hearty Curſe, and ſaid, What would you betray the Son of the Daughter of the Apoſtle of God? Haſan perceiving the People divided, and himſelf ill uſed and almoſt deſerted by the Irakians, weary of Fatigue and Diſturbance, wrote to Moawiyah, proffering to reſign the Caliphate to him upon certain Terms.

[1] Hoſein his younger Brother was utterly againſt Haſan's Abdication, as being a Reflection upon, and Diſparagement to the Memory of their Father Ali; but Haſan well appriſed of Moawiyah's Reſolution on the one ſide, and the Fickleneſs of his own Irakians on the other, [2] perſiſted in his Determination, and as it is ſaid, had written to Moawiyah before this laſt Battel, and propoſed ſome Conditions. That before Moawiyah had received his Letter, he ſent him a Blank Paper ſigned at the Bottom, and bad him write what Terms he pleaſed in it, and he would take Care to ſee them punctually performed. Haſan took the Paper, and doubled the Conditions which he had mentioned in his Letter, and when he and Moawiyah came together, he inſiſted upon the Conditions written in the blank Paper: Which Moawiyah refuſed and told him, that it was reasonable he should be contented with those he had expressed in his Letter, since it was his own Proposal. [3] The Articles that Hasan proposed were these. First, That Moawiyah should give him all the Money in the Treasury of Cufah. 2*dly*, the Revenues of a [4] vast Estate in Persia. 3*dly*, That Moawiyah should make no reproachful Reflection upon his Father Ali. Moawiyah would not consent to the last Article. Then Hasan desired that at least he would forbear doing it in his hearing; which Moawiyah promised him, but did not perform. HASAN. An. Heg. 41. cœpit Maii 6. A. C. 661.

[1] Abulpharagius. [2] Tabari. Elmakin.

told

[5] The Conditions agreed upon, Hasan and Moawiyah went into Cufah together, when Amrou Ebno'l Asi gave Moawiyah a Hint, that he thought it proper for him to order Hasan to stand up and testify his Abdication. Moawiyah did not approve of that Motion; but overcome with Amrou's Importunity, he commanded Hasan to do it. [6] Then Hasan stood up and said, having first praised God; O People! God, whose Name be magnified and glorified, directed you the right Way by the Help of the First of our Family, and hath prevented the Effusion of your Blood by the Means of the last of us. Moawiyah contended with me concerning a Matter, to which I had a better

[3] Abulpheda. [4] Dáráljerd. [5] Tabari. Elmakin. [6] Abulpheragius.

HASAN. An. Heg. 41. cœpit Maii 6. A. C. 661.

better Pretenſion than him; but I choſe rather to reſtrain the People from fighting, and ſurrender it to him. But even this Affair alſo hath a Time prefixed for its Duration, and the World is liable to Changes. Which laſt Words, as preſaging a Revolution, Moawiyah ſo diſreliſhed, that he immediately commanded Haſan to ſit down, and chid Amrou ſeverely for having preſſed him to it; nay, [6] ſome Authors go ſo far, as to ſay, that he was ſo exaſperated againſt him, as never to be heartily reconciled as long as he lived: For he knew very well that it was ſuperfluous for Haſan to acquaint the People with what they were all Eye-Witneſſes of: and that if he did ſpeak at all, it was more than probable, that he would leave a Sting behind him. Haſan, before his Departure, ſtood up and told the Irakians, that he had three Things to lay to their Charge: The Murder of his Father, The Affronts offered to his own Perſon, and The robbing him of his Goods. Now, though Moawiyah had promiſed him the Treaſury of Cufah, they refuſed to let him have it, inſiſting upon its being their Property, and therefore could not be alienated without their Conſent.

However that was no Hindrance to him, for Moawiyah poſſeſſed of the Caliphate, which was the only Thing he aimed at, never grudged him

[6] MS. Hunt. Num. 495.

any

any Revenue whatsoever. He assigned him about an Hundred and Fifty Thousand Pounds a Year, besides large Presents. [7] He and his Brother Hosein retired and lived privately at Medinah. He spent most of his vast Revenue in Deeds of Charity. So little was he attached to the things of this World, that twice in his Life-time he stript himself of all that he had: And three other several Times he divided half his Substance among the Poor. HASAN. An. Heg. 41. cœpit Maii 6. A. C. 661.

His Seal or Motto during his Chaliphate was; There is no God but God, the true and manifest King.

They differ as to the precise Time of his Reign; but most assign him about six Months, or a little over.

[8] Upon his coming to Medinah, he was blamed by some of his Friends there for having so tamely and easily resigned; but the Followers of Ali, Hasan and Hosein to this very Day look upon it as a singular Demonstration of his excellent Disposition, and Tenderness over the People, upon which account he had been before recommended by the Prophet. To those that asked him what induced him to resign so easily; he answered that he was weary of the World: Besides that the Cufians were such a faithless People, that never a Man of them ever truſted another, but he was a Sufferer by it: That never two of them concurred in their Opinion and Deſire of the ſame thing: Nor had they any regard either to Good or Evil: Beſides that their Behaviour towards his Father had quite turned his Thoughts from entertaining any the leaſt hopes of rectifying any thing that was amiſs through their Aſſiſtance; and to ſum up their Character, That they were the moſt thieviſh miſchievous People in the World.

[7] D'Herbelot. [8] MS. Hunt. Num. 495.

HASAN. An. Heg. 41. cæpit Maii 6. A. C. 661.

Though this is the true Character of the Cufians, yet they expreſſed a great Reverence for him; for when, as ſoon as he entertained thoughts of his Reſignation, he made this Speech to them, We are your Commanders and your Chiefs, and we are of the Family of the Houſe of your Prophet, from which God hath removed Pollution, and whom he hath purified; there was not a Man preſent in the Congregation, but wept ſo loud that you might hear him ſob; beſides they expreſſed their Concern with Tears at his Departure from Cufah to Medinah.

Whilſt he lived at Medinah, ſome of the Karegites, thoſe Hereticks that gave his Father ſo much Diſturbance, made an Inſurrection againſt Moawiyah, who wrote to Haſan to go out againſt them. Haſan deſired to be excuſed; and told him that he had left off all publick Affairs on purpurpoſe to avoid it; and that if he had cared for fighting at all, it ſhould have been againſt him. HASAN. An. Heg. 41. cœpit Maii 6. A. C. 661.

At laſt in the Forty ninth Year of their Date, which falls in with the Six Hundred and Sixty ninth of ours, he died at Medinah, poiſoned by his Wife, who was ſuborned to commit that Wickedneſs by Yezid the Son of Moawiyah, upon promiſe of marrying her afterwards: But inſtead of that, ſhe was forced to be contented with a good Sum of Money, which Moawiyah gave her for her pains; for Yezid was not ſo mad as to truſt himſelf in her Embraces.

When the time of his Death drew near, his Phyſician, as he was walking backwards and forwards about the Room, and eying him narrowly, ſaid that his Bowels were eaten up with Poiſon. Hoſein his Brother begged of him, to tell him who it was that gave him the Draught, and ſwore that he would be revenged on him, if he could reach him, before his Burial. If not, he would ſend ſome body that ſhould. Haſan anſwered, O Brother! The Life of this World is made up of Nights which vaniſh away; Let him alone till he and I meet together before God: And refuſed to mention the Perſon. Some ſay that Moawiyah ſuborned ſome of his Servants to Poiſon him.

HASAN. An. Heg. 41. cœpit Maii 6. A. C. 661.

He was born at Medinah, in the middle of the Month Ramadan in the third Year of the Hegirah. There is an infinity of Traditions concerning him and his Brother Hoſein; and no wonder, conſidering they were the Grandchildren of one reputed an inſpired Prophet by his only Daughter. Of Haſan they relate, that he was very much like his Grandfather Mahomet, who when he was born, ſpit in his Mouth, and named him Haſan. He uſed to expreſs his Fondneſs of him in his Infancy after ſuch a loathſome manner as cannot be repeated. When he was at Prayers, little Haſan uſed to come and clamber upon him, and Mahomet to humour him would hold him on, and [5] prolong the Prayers on purpoſe. Nay, ſometimes in the midſt of a Diſcourſe to the People, if he ſaw Haſan and Hoſein coming towards him, he would come down to them and embrace them, and take them up with him into the Pulpit; then, making a ſhort Apology in behalf of their Innocency and tender Age, proceed in his Diſcourſe.

[6] My Author ſays, "That the Syrians indeed "ſet up Moawiyah at Jeruſalem, becauſe there

[5] The Mahometans ſay their Prayers proſtrated, ſo that their Foreheads touch the Ground, though not all the while. And ſo we are to underſtand it in the Old Teſtament, when it is ſaid of any one, he fell down and worſhipped; for the ſame Word that ſignifies Worſhip is uſed for a Mahometan's ſaying his Prayers. [6] MS. Hunt. Num. 495.

"was

" was none to oppoſe them, and the Irakians " ſet up Haſan againſt him, and had undoubt- " edly ſucceeded in their Attempt; if their " Miſmanagement and Diviſions among them- " ſelves had not fruſtrated it. But had they un- " derſtood aright, they would have magnified " the Mercy of God, in giving them the Apo- " ſtle's Grandſon. What we find in the Book " intituled, The demonſtrations of Prophecy, from " the Tradition of Sephinah, who was a ſervant " or freed Man of the Apoſtle of God, is a " Proof that he was the right Succeſſor. Ma- " homet ſaid, The Chaliphate ſhall continue after " me thirty Years, and after that ſhall be a King- " dom. Now Mahomet died in the Eleventh " Year of the Hegirah, and Haſan's Abdication " was in the Fortieth: From whence it is plain, " not only that Mahomet is a Prophet, but that " Haſan is his rightful Succeſſor. That Maho- " met had praiſed him, for this his relinquiſhing " the preſent periſhing World, and deſiring that " other which is permanent, and ſparing the " Effuſion of the Blood of this People: That " Mahomet one Day mounted the Pulpit, and " Haſan ſat by him, which he frequently uſed " to do; and Mahomet looked ſometimes upon " him, and ſometimes upon the People: After " a Pauſe, he ſaid, O People! This Son of mine is " Lord, and God ſhall unite by his Means two

HASAN. An. Heg. 41. cœpit Maii 6. A. C. 661.

HASAN. An. Heg. 41. cæpit Maii 6. A. C. 661.

"great contending Parties of the Muſlemans." This laſt is from Albochâri, the great Collector of the Traditions of Mahomet.

I have not yet been able to find out who this Author is from whom I have taken this laſt Argument, becauſe the Book is imperfect both at the Beginning and the End, and I could never find any other Copy of him: But he hath been of ſingular Uſe to me throughout the whole Courſe of this Hiſtory to the Life of Merwan the Son of Hakem, where the Copy fails. I find in another Paſſage, that he was himſelf the Author of the Book of the Demonſtrations of Prophecy which he mentions. He alſo affirms, that he wrote another Treatiſe to prove that it was impracticable for Mahomet to marry Abu Saphyan's Daughter, of which more afterwards. Whoſoever he was, it is certain he was a great Imàm. To return to our Hiſtory.

[7] A Woman once having preſented him with a Bunch of fine Herbs; he aſked her, if ſhe was a Free-woman; the Woman told him ſhe was a Slave, but that the Preſent ſhe had made was rare and curious. Haſan gave her her Liberty, and ſaid to thoſe that were preſent, We have received this Inſtruction from God himſelf, that we ought to give to thoſe that make us Preſents ſomething of more Value than that which

[7] D'Herbelot.

they

HASAN. An. Heg. 41. cœpit Maii 6. A. C. 661.

they give us; meaning, that this moral Inſtruction is couched in the Alcoran, which the Muſlemans, blind as they are, look upon as the Word of God.

They relate a wonderful Inſtance of the MODERATION of this Chaliph. A Slave having ſpilled a Diſh of ſcalding Broth upon him as he ſat at Table, threw himſelf down inſtantly at his Knees, and repeated to him theſe Words of the Alcoran, Paradiſe is open to thoſe that govern their Paſſion. Haſan anſwered him, I am not at all in a Paſſion. The Slave went on, And to thoſe who pardon Offences: I pardon you yours, ſaid Haſan. The Slave went on to the End of the Verſe, which ſays, God loves thoſe above all who do good to them that have offended them. Haſan concluded too; Since it is ſo, I give you your Liberty and four Hundred Drachms of Silver.

There is an Author, who treating concerning Haſan's Death, ſays, that it was contained in the Treaties between him and Moawiyah; that Moawiyah ſhould never declare a Succeſſor ſo long as Haſan lived, but ſhould leave the Election in the Hands of a certain Number of Perſons, of which Haſan was to have the Nomination, as Omar had done before. But that Moawiyah deſirous of leaving the Chaliphate to

HASAN. his Son Yezid, thought he could not bring his An. Heg. 41. Design about so long as Hasan was alive.
cœpit Maii 6.
A. C. 661. He had twenty Children, fifteen Males and five Daughters. [3] Though his Wives were all of them remarkably fond of him, yet he was apt very frequently to divorce them and marry new ones. There are some among the Sectaries of Ali who draw the Line or Descent of the Imams from Abdollah, one of his Children, who had a Son named Yahya; but the Persians will have the Succession to pass from Hasan to his younger Brother Hosein.

The Muslemans quote this Sentence of Hasan; The Tears which are let fall through Devotion should not be wiped off, nor the Water which remains upon the Body after legal washing; because this Water makes the Face of the Faithful shine, when they present themselves before God.

[4] He died at the Age of Forty Seven Years, in the Month Sefer of the Forty Ninth Year of the Hegirah. He left Directions in his Will for them to bury him near his Grandfather Mahomet: But to prevent any Disturbance, and lest he should be carried to the common Burial Place, he thought it proper to ask Ayesha's Leave, which she granted. But when he was dead, Saëd, who was Governor of the Town,

[3] MS. Hunt. ubi supra. D'Herbelot. [4] Ebno'l Athir.

and

and Merwan the Son of Hakem, and all the whole Family of the Houſe of Ommiyah that were then at Medinah, oppoſed it. Upon which the heats between the two Families aroſe to a great Height: At laſt, Ayeſha ſaid, that it was her Houſe, and that ſhe would not allow him to be buried there. Wherefore they laid him in the common Burying Place. When Moawiyah heard of Haſan's Death, he fell down and worſhipped.

HASAN. An. Heg. 41. cœpit Maii 6. A.C. 661.

The

The Chaliphs of the Family of Ommiyah, which are fourteen in all, the first of which is,

MOAWIYAH,

The Son of Abu Sophyan.

Being the Sixth from MAHOMET.

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 41. capit Maii 6. A. C. 661.

ALL Oppoſition removed, Maowiyah takes entire Poſſeſſion of the Chaliphate. The Family of Haſhem, of which were Mahomet and Ali,[7] lay like Coals raked up in Embers not able to ſtir. The Hearts of the People were entirely in the Intereſt of Hoſein the younger Brother of Haſan, but Moawiyah had Poſſeſſion and the Army. He was indeed a Man of great Abilities and ſteady Conduct; but before we proceed to give an Account of his Government, it will not be amiſs to enquire a little into his Original.

His Father Abu Sophyan was one of the Heads of the noble Tribe of the Coreiſh, of which was Mahomet; and as ſoon as Mahomet took up

[7] MS. Hunt. Num. 495.

Arms,

Arms, not so much for the Defence as for the Propagation of his pretendedly inspired Religion, Abu Sophyan was made Generalissimo of the Infidels against him: and after the Battel of Beder, he stood very fair for the Headship of that Tribe. He wanted nothing to recommend him; his Courage, his Gravity and immense Riches, set him above all Competition. But [6] at last he was convinced, (as it should seem, by a signal Victory gained by Mahomet over his Enemies,) of the Truth of his Pretensions. This was no small Accession to Mahomet's Interest, who had been sufficiently galled and haraſſed by the Coreish. Moawiyah and his Wife came in the same Day. Abu Sophyan after his Conversion to Mahometanism begged three things of Mahomet. The first was, that, to make Amends for former Offences, as he had commanded the Forces of the Infidels against the true Religion, he might now have the Honour of having the Command of the Army of the Faithful against the Infidels; which was granted. His second Petition was, that his Son Moawiyah might be his Secretary. To which Mahomet assented. The third was, that the Apostle would vouchsafe to marry his second Daughter Gazah; for which Mahomet begged his Excuse. Our Author says, it was not lawful; but forbears the Reason, because he says, Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 41. cæpit Maii 6. A.C. 661.

[6] Yaumal phethi. The Day of Victory.

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 41. cœpit Maii 6. A. C. 661.

says, as we have observed before, he hath written a particular Treatise relating to that Affair.

[1] Moawiyah was no sooner settled in his Government, but the Karegites, Enemies to all Government both Ecclesiastical and Civil, began to infest him: They always were of Opinion that the Person who was to preside in Spirituals, should not be one of Man's making, nor descend by any Succession; but whose Spirituality should recommend him to the Approbation of the Godly. Upon Hasan's refusal to take up Arms, Moawiyah sent the Syrians against them; but the Separatists beat the Syrians. So he applied himself to his new Subjects the Cusians, and the Inhabitants of all those Parts of Babylonia, and told them that now was their time to give him Proof of the Sincerity of their Obedidience, that he should have no Security of their Loyalty, unless they vigorously opposed this Rebellion. They having taken Arms, the Separatists, would have persuaded them to desist, and asked them whether or no Moawiyah was not their common Enemy. Let us alone, said they, to make War upon him: If we kill him, we have ridded you of your Enemy: If he kills us, you are rid of us. The Cusians did not think it proper to hearken to their Advice, and the

[1] Ebnol Athîr.

War

War was soon ended by the suppression of the Rebels. Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 43. cœpit Apr. 4. A. C. 663.

7 We meet with little worth observing after this, till the three and fortieth Year, 8 which was remarkable for the Death of the famous Amrou, of whom it is reported by Tradition, that Mahomet said, There is no truer Mulleman, nor more stedfast in the Faith than Amrou. He was in the Wars of Syria, where he behaved himself with singular Courage and Resolution. Always excellent in his Advice, and steady in the Execution. Afterwards Omar sent him into Ægypt, which he Conquered, and was made Lieutenant there. Othman continued him in that Post four Years, and then removed him: Upon which he retired and lived privately in Palestine. After Othman's Death, he went over to Moawiyah upon his Invitation; and had a great share in all that Controversy between Ali and Moawiyah, who continued him in the Lieutenancy of Ægypt till his Death, allowing him all the Revenues of that rich Country, upon Condition that he should maintain the Forces that were kept there.

He was justly reckoned one of the most considerable Men among the Arabians, both upon the account of the quickness of his natural Parts,

8 MS. Hunt. Num. 495. An. Heg. 43. cœpit. Ap. 14. A. C. 663.

his

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 43. cœpit Apr. 14. A. C. 663.

his Valour and good Judgment. Before he turned Mahometan, he was one of those three Poets that used to write Lampoons upon Mahomet, in which he excelled. There are some fine Proverbs of his remaining (they are my Author's words for we never saw them) and good Verses. His dying Speech to his Children, is Pathetick and Masculine. If I had had a more perfect Copy of it, I would have inserted it. He laments in it very much, his ever having exercised his Wit in exposing the Prophet.

The same Year died Abdollah Ben Salem a Jewish Rabbin, who had turned Mahometan betimes: He used to say that when Mahomet came first to Medinah, he used to press amongst the Crowd to get a sight of him; and that at the first glance he perceived that he had nothing in his Countenance that looked like an Impostor.

[3] We have before observed, that Ziyàd was in Ali's Reign made Lieutenant of Persia. Which Office he discharged very much to his own Reputation, and the Advantage of the People. He was a Man of incomparable Parts, and prodigious greatness of Spirit. He was Moawiyah's Brother by the Father's side, but a Bastard: And old Abu Sophyan durst not own him for fear of Omar's Severity. He was born in the Year of the Hegirah, and as he grew up quickly

[3] An Heg. 44. cœpit Apr. 3. A. C. 664.

quickly diſtinguiſhed himſelf, by his great Abilities and maſterly Eloquence, to ſuch a degree, that once in the Reign of Omar at a meeting of the Companions, he was ſo much taken notice of, that Amrou ſaid; had the Father of this Youth been of the Family of the Coreiſh, he would have driven all the Arabians before him with his Walking-Stick. Moawiyah was reſolved to ſecure him in his Intereſt; and he thought no way ſo proper, as by owning him publickly to be his Brother. Ziyàd in Omar's time was made a Cadi or Judge; and when Witneſſes came before him, accuſing Almogéirah of Incontinency; whether out of Favour, or becauſe they failed in their Proof, he diſmiſſed Almogéirah, and ſcourged the Witneſſes ſeverely. This endeared him to Almogéirah for ever after. Ziyàd having been placed in the Lieutenancy of Perſia by Ali, upon Haſan's Reſignation to Moawiyah, he kept at a diſtance, and refuſed to acknowledge his Government. This gave Moawiyah no ſmall uneaſineſs, who was extremely afraid that Ziyàd ſhould ſtrike in with the Family of Haſhem, and embroil his Affairs by renewing the War. Moawiyah had given the Lieutenancy of Cufah to Almogéirah; who making him a Viſit in the forty ſecond Year, Moawiyah acquainted him with the Cauſes of his Uneaſineſs; who aſked his leave to go to him, to which he conſented, and Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 44. cœpit Apr. 3. A. C. 664.

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 44. cœpit Apr. 3. A. C. 664.

and sent a civil Letter by him with a kind Invitation. Mogeirah made so good Use of his Friendship with Ziyàd, that he never ceased importuning him till he had prevailed upon him to go along with him to Moawiyah. Where he was no sooner arrived, but he immediately acknowled him Chaliph. Soon after which, Moawiyah owned him to be his Brother by the Father's side, which was done by producing the Evidence of the Conversation between Ziyàd's Mother and Abu Sophyan.

Abu Sophyan, in the Days of Ignorance, before drinking Wine was made a Sin by the Alcoran, travelling in Thayef, refreshed himself at a Publick House; where he lay with this Ziyàd's Mother who was then married to a Greek Slave. The old Man that kept the House was yet Alive; and Moawiyah, to own Ziyàd in as publick a manner as might be, upon a set Day in a full Assembly, examined him, touching the Conversation of Abu Sophyan with Somyah. The old Man gave in such a strong Evidence, as would have passed for a very good Proof in the Case of Impotency. Ziyàd was angry, and said that he was called for to bring Proof, and not Scandal. However by this means he was acknowledged to be a true Arabian, of the noble Blood of the Family of the Coreish; which though illegitimate, was a greater Honour than he could ever ever otherways have obtained to: For let his Atchievements have been never ſo great, he muſt ſtill have undergone ſome Reflection upon the account of the Baſeneſs of his Original. Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 44. cœpit Apr. 3. A. C. 664.

[3] It is obſerved, that this is the firſt time that ever the Law, that is the Alcoran, was openly violated in a judicial way of proceeding. For the Child belonged to his legal Father, the Greek Slave that married his Mother: And Mahomet had left it as a Deciſion in ſuch Caſes; The Child to the Blankets, and the Whore to the Stone. That is, Bring up the Child, and ſtone the Whore. Moawiyah's Relations ſtormed and were quite out of Patience, they ſaid that he had not only introduced a Son of a Whore into the Family, to the diſparagement of all their Kindred; but had raked into the Aſhes of old Abu Sophyan his Father, who had lived and died with a good Reputation. Moawiyah could bear all their Complaints very patiently. He knew he had gained his point, and ſecured entirely in his Intereſt the greateſt Man of the Age.

Abdollah the Son of Amar was at this time Governor of Baſorah; whom Moawiyah removed, as unequal to that Charge, becauſe of the too great Gentleneſs of his Diſpoſition: For the Country was quite over-run with Thieves and Murderers for want of Diſcipline. He for his part never

[3] Abulpheda.

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 45. cœp. Mart. 23. A.C. 664.

cared to punish any, but inclined rather to win them by the sweetness of his Temper, and a gentle Behaviour. The People, insupportably afflicted with this Grievance, made their Complaint to Moawiyah; who put in Hareth for a little time; but quickly after made them amends [5] for Abdollah's Lenity, by sending them Ziyàd who drew the Sword and chastised their Insolence with exemplary Punishments. When he came to Basorah things were in such a bad Condition that there was hardly any walking the Streets; but especially in the Night, which was always full of Disorder and Bloodshed. He made a very severe Speech to them, at which he had an excellent Talent, being reckoned the best Orator next to Ali, [6] who never had any Equal. One of the Polite Arabians used to say That he never in his Life heard a Man speak well, but he wished he would have done, being in pain for him, lest he should fall beneath himself and speak worse; Ziyàd only excepted, for the more he spoke the more he excelled. In this Speech he acquainted them that he was very well apprised of the lamentable Condition they were in, upon the account of these Disorders: And that he was resolved to put an end to them. He next published an Order, [7] forbidding any Person of what

[5] An Heg. 45. cœpit Mart. 23. A.C. 664. [6] MS. Huut.
[7] D'Herbelot.

Qua-

Quality ſoever to be found abroad in the Streets, or in any publick Place, after the Hour of Evening Prayer upon pain of Death. And to put his Order in Execution, he appointed a ſtrong Watch to go the Rounds, and put to the Sword every one they met out of their Houſes after that Hour. There were two Hundred Perſons killed the firſt Night, but five the Second, and no Blood at all ſhed in the Third. Moawiyah I An. Heg. 45 cæp. Mart. 23 A. C. 664.

Beſides the Lieutenancy of Baſorah, Moawiyah gave him thoſe of Choraſan, Sejeſtan, India, Bahrein and Ammàn. Not unadviſedly: For the more he committed to his Care, ſo much the lighter to himſelf was the Burthen of his Government. The very Name of Ziyàd made all the Villains within the Precincts of his Government tremble. He was not ſavage nor cruel in his Temper: But ſtrictly juſt, and abſolute in his way of governing: Impatient of the leaſt neglect of his Commands; and one that would not abate an Ace of his Authority. But notwithſtanding all his Greatneſs, he met with a Rebuff in this five and fortieth Year; which it is uncertain how he would have reſented, if the Perſon that offered it had lived a little longer. [4] He had ſent Hakem the Son of Amar to take a place called Mount Aſhal; Hakem ſucceeded very well in the Enterprize, killed a great Number of the Enemy; and brought off all the Riches of the Place. Upon this Ziyàd ſends him word, that he had received a Letter from Moawiyah, the Emperor of the Faithful, commanding him to lay apart all the White and Yellow, meaning the Silver and Gold, belonging to this Spoil, that it might be put into the Treaſury. Now as to this Particular, there is a deciſive Rule in the Alcoran: There being [8] a Chapter made on purpoſe, occaſioned by a Mutiny among Mahomet's Soldiers, about the diviſion of the Spoil. That is, that after any Victory there ſhall firſt be taken out a fifth Part of the Spoils to be reſerved for the Treaſury; and the reſt be divided among the Soldiers. Hakem ſtuck cloſe to the Text of the Alcoran, and ſent Ziyàd word that the Authority of the Book of God was ſuperior to that of the Emperor of the Faithful's Letter; and that hath it thus, Though the Heavens and the Earth conſpired together againſt a Servant of God, who put his truſt in him, he would find him a ſecure place of Refuge, and a means of Deliverance. Then he laid aſide the fifth Part according to the Text; and divided the Spoil among the Soldiers. After this, (for he expected no Mercy) he ſaid, O God! if I be in thy Favour take me. His Requeſt was granted; and he died quickly after.

[4] MS. Hunt. Num. 495.

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 45. Sep. Mart. 23. A. C. 664.

[8] Surat' alanphal. The Chapter of Spoils; which is the eighth.

This

This same Year Zeid the Son of Thabet, one of Mahomet's Secretaries when he dictated the Alcoran, died. He wrote that Copy which was used by the Chaliphs or Imàms at the Command of Othman the Son of Affàn. Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 45 cœp. Mart. 23 A. C. 664.

[8] My Author had seen it, and adds, that all he had seen of his Writing was an extraordinary fair strong Hand. This Zeid was a Man of the greatest Parts of any in his Age. He learned Hebrew in fifteen Days, so as to be able to read the Books of the Jews. He learned Persian of one of Cosroes his Ambassadors in eighteen Days; and he learned Æthiopick, Greek and Coptick of one of Mahomet's Slaves. He was fifteen Years old at the Battel of the Ditch. He was the most pleasant facetious Man in the World at home, and the most reserved when he went abroad. Once he saw the People coming from Prayers, and he made what Haste he could to get out of the Way from them, like one that did not care to be seen. He used to say, He that doth not reverence Men will not reverence God.

This Year Merwàn the Son of Hákem went on Pilgrimage to Meccah; he was Governor of Medinah.

[9] The next Year Abdorrahmàn Son of Caled the Great was poisoned in Syria: Occasioned

[8] MS. Hunt. Num. 495. [9] Altabari. Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 46. cœpit Mart. 13. A. C. 666.

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 46. cæp. Mart. 13. A. C. 666.

by Moawiyah's Jealousy. For the Soldiers, those especially who had been Witnesses of his Father's Valour and Conduct, to whom he appeared no way inferior, favoured him to that degree that Moawiyah was afraid of him; and during his Absence upon an Expedition against the Greeks, tampered with a Christian Servant of his to Poison him, upon promise not only to remit him his own Tribute, but to give him the Lieutenancy of Hems. Upon Abdorrahman's return, the Conditions were punctually performed on both sides; but he did not long enjoy the Reward of his Perfidiousness; for Caled the Son of Abdorrahman receiving Information of it, came into Syria, and revenged his Father's Death upon that wicked Slave: Upon which Moawiyah imprisoned him for a time; and made him pay the Money for the Expiation of Murther: Afterwards he dismissed him, and returned to Medinah.

Not long after this, happened the Death of a very great Man among the Followers of Ali.[6] His Name was Hejer, a Person remarkable for for his singular Abstinence, Piety, and strictness of Life, constant Purification according to the Mahometan Law, and exactness in observing the Hours of Devotion. He lived at Cufah. It was the Custom for Moawiyah and his Lieutenants every Friday in their Harangues to the People to exceed in the Praise and Commendation of

[6] Abulpheda.

Oth-

Othman, and rail at and revile Ali. This was done by Almogéirah when he was Lieutenant of Cufah, more out of Complaiſance to Moawiyah, than any Inclination of his own. As he was one Day pronouncing theſe Reproaches againſt Ali; Hejer and his Company ſtood up, and interrupted him, and returned the ill Language back again upon himſelf: But Mogeirah paſſed it by and forgave them, without taking any further notice. Ziyàd was not ſo gentle upon the ſame provoking occaſion. He uſed to divide the Year into two equal Parts: Six Months he reſided at Cufah; the other ſix at Baſorah. Coming according to his Cuſtom to Cufah, in his Harangue he called Ali by the Name of Abu Toráb, which ſignifies in Arabick, Father of Duſt, or Duſty (for it is common with the Arabians to uſe the Word Father in ſuch Caſes.) This was the moſt acceptable Nick-name to Ali in the World, having been given him by Mahomet himſelf. Hejer, reſolved to affront him, ſtood up and ſaid, He ſeems to have deſigned a Compliment to Ali. This provoked Ziyàd to ſuch a degree that he immediately ſeized him, and thirteen more of his Companions, and ſent them in Chains to Moawiyah.

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 46. cæp. Mart. 13. A. C. 666.

3 But though this was the end of it; there were ſeveral preceding Provocations. For before this, Hejer being ſo Popular for his Piety, and 3 Ebno'l Athîr. MS. Hunt.

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 46. cæp. Mart. 13. A. C. 666.

such an avowed Enemy to Moawiyah, and Friend of Ali and his Party; Ziyàd would have carried him along with him to Baſorah from Cufah; for fear he ſhould make any Diſturbance. Hejer ſaid that he was indiſpoſed. Ziyàd anſwered angrily, that he knew he was indiſpoſed as to his Religion, Heart and Underſtanding, adding with an Oath that if he dared to raiſe any Commotion, he ſhould have an Eye over him. Another time when Ziyàd was making a Speech to the People, he ſtood ſo long that the Hour of Prayer was come. Hejer, who was the ſtricteſt Man alive in all things belonging to the exerciſe of his Religion, cryed out Salàt, to Prayers: Ziyàd took no notice of it, but ſtill went on with his Diſcourſe. Hejer, fearing leſt the time ſhould be paſt, began the Prayers in the Congregation himſelf, upon which Ziyàd was forced to break off, and come down and joyn with them. This Affront he never forgave, looking upon it as a great Diminution of his Character, but wrote a long Letter to Moawiyah, aggravating the Matter, and deſiring that he might put him in Irons, and ſend him to him. This laſt Time Ziyàd was forced to take a Journey on purpoſe from Baſorah to Cufah, upon Information that Hejer and the Company had refuſed to acknowledge his Lieutenant there, and uſed to throw Duſt at him when he was in his Pulpit. This obliged Ziyàd to come back to Cufah, where, cloathed in a Silk Caſſock, and a Veſt of Gold Brocade, he went into the Pulpit himſelf, and made a ſevere Speech to the People, telling them, He ſhould make but a very inſignificant Figure in his Poſt if he ſuffered his Authority to be thus ſet at nought and trampled upon, without making an Example of Hejer. In his Oration he frequently, as Occaſion ſerved, uſed theſe Words, And it belongs to the Emperor of the Faithful; at which Hejer took up an Handful of Duſt and flung at him, with theſe Words, God curſe thee, thou lyeſt: Whereupon Ziyàd came down and went to Prayers among the People. Then retiring to the Caſtle he ſent for Hejer, who refuſing to come, he ſent a Party to fetch him, between whom and Hejer's Friends there was a little Skirmiſh with Stones and Cudgels, ſo that they did not carry him off that Time; but he was taken ſoon after and ſent to Moawiyah, attended with a ſufficient Number of Witneſſes to teſtify againſt him, that he had ſpoken reproachfully of the Chaliph, affronted the Emir (Ziyàd) and affirmed, that the Government did not belong to any of right, but only to the Family of Ali. Moawiyah ſent ſome Officers with Orders to put them to Death, and Authors differ as to the Circumſtance of their being admitted into his Preſence or not. Gadrah, a Village on the Back-

to

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 46. cæp. Mart. 13. A. C. 666.

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 46. cæp. Mart. 13. A. C. 666.

Back-side of Damascus, was the Place appointed for their Execution; and during their Stay there, Moawiyah advised with his Friends how they should be disposed of. Some were for putting them to Death, others for dispersing them through the several Territories of his vast Dominions. Ziyàd sent him Word, that if he had any Occasion for the Kingdom of Iràk, they must dye. The chief Men of the Court begged off six of them. When Hejer was come near the Place of Execution, he desired Space to wash himself, which he always punctually observed, after which he said two short Prayers, and rising up, said, If I had been afraid of Death I could have made them longer; but when he saw his Grave digged ready for him, his Winding-Sheet spread out, and the Executioner's Sword drawn, he was observed to tremble. Whereupon, being asked if he did not say that he was not afraid: He asked again, How should it be possible not to be moved at such a Prospect? The Executioner bad him stretch out his Neck streight; he answered he would not be assistant to his own Death. Then his Head was immediately struck off; his Body was washed, and he was buried in his Chains according to his own Directions.

Ayesha had sent a Messenger to intercede for him, who arrived too late. Afterwards when Moawiyah went to Medinah, he visited Ayesha, who said to him from behind the Curtain, What was become of your Compassion, Moawiyah, when you killed Hejer and his Companions? I lose that, Mother, said he, when I am absent from such Persons as you are. Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 46. cœpit Maii 13. A. C. 666.

Moa-

[1] About the latter End of the eight and fortieth Year, Moawiyah sent his Son Yezid with a powerful Army to besiege Constantinople: Our Authors give us no Account of the Particulars of that Siege, but only mention three or four of the most eminent of the Companions, whose Zeal, notwithstanding their great Age, prompted them to undergo such Fatigue and Hazard. The Army suffered the Extremity of Hardship in their March; but they had a [2] Tradition sufficient to encourage them, it being no less than a Plenary Indulgence; Mahomet having said, The Sins of the first Army that takes the City of Cæsar are forgiven. Here it was that the famous Abu Jyub was killed, who had been with Mahomet at the Battels of Beder and Ohud: His Tomb is held in such Veneration, [3] that to this very Day the Emperors of the Ottoman Family go to it to have their Swords girt on, upon their Accession to the Throne.

[4] In the fiftieth Year died Almogéirah the Governour of Cufah. There had been a great

[1] Anno 48. [2] MS. Hunt. Numb. 495. Albochári.
[3] D' Herbelot. [4] An. Heg. 50. cœpit Jan. 28. A. C. 670.

Plague

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 50. cœpit Jan. 28. A. C. 670.

Plague raging there, which made him retire; but upon its ceasing he returned and died of it. He was an active Man, and of very good Parts; he had lost one of his Eyes at the Battel of Yermouk, though some will have it that it was with looking upon an Eclipse. He was accounted to of the wrong Party, and one of the chief of them; for thus they reckon; there are five Elders on Ali's Side. Mahomet, Ali, Phatemah, Hasan, Hosein; and their Opposites are, Ababeber, Omar, Moawiyah, Amrou and Mogéirah.

The same Year Kairwàn, the Metropolis of that Province which is properly called Africa, was built, though not finished till the fifty fifth Year. [7] It lies thirty three Leagues distant from Carthage, towards the North East, and twelve from the Sea: The Account they give of it is, that Moawiyah having constituted Okbah Governour of the Province of Africa, he put all those to the Sword that had revolted from Mahometanism; for it was their Custom upon the Approach of the Saracen Army to make Profession of it, and upon their Departure to return to their old Religion again. The Place of the Governour's Residence before was in Zeweilah and Barca; wherefore Okbah resolving to have a Garrison thereabouts to keep them in Awe, pitched upon Kairwàn; and because his March had been interrupted and perplexed by the Woodiness of the Country, which was full of wild Beasts and Serpents; he felled all the Trees round about in that Neighbourhood, and bestowed them in the Building. This City was of great Use to them for keeping the Country in Subjection; and it being remote from the Sea, and bordering upon the Desart, rendered them secure from the Invasions of the Sicilian and Roman Navies; so that afterwars it became a flourishing City, considerable not only for its publick and private Buildings, Riches and the like, but also for the Study of the Sciences and polite Literature. Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 50. cœpit Jan. 28. A. C. 660.

[7] Abulpheda. Golius in Alfergak p. 162. Ebno'l Athîr.

the

[7] This same Year is remarkable for the Death of one Rahya, who was one of the earliest Professors of Mahometanism; he was not present at the Battle of Beder. Mahomet used to say of him, That of all the Men he had ever seen, Rahya did most resemble the Angel Gabriel. [8] The Year after Saëd Ben Zend died; he was the last of those (I think they were ten in all) that had a positive Promise of Paradise.

[9] About this time Moawiyah, who kept his constant Residence at Damascus, had a Fancy to remove Mahomet's Pulpit thither from Medinah. He said, That the Walking-Stick and Pulpit of the Apostle of God should not remain in the Hands of the Murderers of Othman. Great [7] Abulpheda. [8] An. 51, 52. [9] Ebno'l Athîr. Altabari. It must be in the Year 54, for then there was an Eclipse of the Sun.

Search

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 50. cœpit Jan. 28. A. C. 670.

Search was made for the Walking-Stick, and at last they found it. Then they went, in Obedience to his Commands, to remove the Pulpit; when immediately, to their great Surprize and and Astonishment, the Sun was eclipsed to that Degree that the Stars appeared. This put them all into a great Consternation, for they looked upon it as a manifest Indication of the Divine Displeasure, for their presuming to lay Hands upon the Apostle's Pulpit, in order to remove it from the Place where he had set it himself. This made them desist from their Enterprize, and the Medinians were left in the peaceable Possession of this holy Relick; till some Years afterwards, Abdòlmélik had a mind to it; but one of the Medinians said to him, For God's Sake do not attempt such a Thing, for Moawiyah did but move it once and the Sun was eclipsed! He urged besides a Tradition from Mahomet, who had said, Whosoever shall swear upon my Pulpit falsly, Hell shall be his Mansion. And, added he, will you go and and take it away from the Medinians, when it is the Decision of their Controversies? Upon this Representation Abdòlmélik forbore, and never mentioned it again. After him Alwáled in his Pilgrimage made the same Attempt, but when he sent for it, his Messenger received this Answer, Bid your Master fear God, and not expose himself to the Divine

Dis-

Diſpleaſure; with which Anſwer Alwáled remained very well ſatisfied. Afterwards when Solyman the Son of Abdòlmelik came on Pilgrimage that Way, Amrou, the Son of Abdolaziz, was mentioning theſe Things to him; I do not love, anſwered Solyman, to hear theſe Things mentioned either of the Emperor Abdòlmélik, or of Waled, what have we to do with it? We have taken Poſſeſſion of the World, and it is in our Hands, and we will ſtand to the Determination of the Muſleman Doctors. Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 53. cœpit Dec. 26. A. C. 672.

[2] And now the famous Ziyad's Time was come. He died of the Plague on the third Day of the Month Ramadàn in the fifty third Year of the Hegirah, which was his Age. [3] A little before he died he wrote a Letter to Moawiyah, acquainting him that he had reduced all Irâk into perfect Subjection to him from North to South, and begged of him to give him the Lieutenancy of Arabia Petræa. It is ſuperfluous to add that it was granted, for it was not in Moawiyah's Power to deny him any Thing, ſhall I ſay, or rather that it was his Intereſt to have him employed every where if poſſible. [4] As ſoon as the Arabians heard of it they were under the greateſt Concern in the World, for fear he ſhould exerciſe his Tyranny over them

[2] An. Heg. 53. cœpit Dec. 26. A.C. 672. [3] MS. Hunt. Num. 495. [4] Ebno'l Athîr.

as

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 53. cœpit Dec. 26. A. C. 672.

as he had done before upon the poor Irakians. Upon the first News of it, the Son of Amer rose up and went to the Temple of Meccha to deprecate his coming amongst them, [5] and the People prayed in Faith. Ziyàd, struck with the Plague, felt such an intollerable Pain in his Hand that he consulted a Cadi, in point of Conscience, whether it were better to cut it off or not. The Cadi told him, That he was afraid, if his Time was come, he should go before God without that Hand, which was cut off to avoid the appearing before him; and if it was not come, he would remain lame among Men, which would be a [6] Reproach to his Child; wherefore he was of Opinion, that live or die he had better let it alone; and so left him. However, notwithstanding this grave Decision, Ziyàd, impatient of the Pain which increased every Moment, was resolved to have it cut off; but when he saw the Fire, and the Cauterizing Irons, his Heart failed him. It is said, that he had about him no less than an Hundred and Fifty Physicians, three of which had belonged to Cosroes the Son of Hormuz King of Persia, but it was not in their Power to reverse the sealed Decree, nor the Thing that was determined. He had been Moawiyah's

[5] Arab. Waonáso Yúminúna. [6] There is nothing more common among the Arabians than to nick-name Children from the Imperfections of their Parents, as to call such an one the Son of the Lame, or the Son of the Blind.

Lieu-

Lieutenant over Irâk five Years. He was buried near Cufah, which he paſſed by in his Journey towards Arabia, in order to take Poſſeſſion of his new Government there. When Abdollah, the Son of Amer, heard of his Death, he ſaid, Go thy way, thou Son of Somyah; this World did not ſtay with thee, neither haſt thou attained to the other. Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 53. cœpit Dec. 26. A. C. 672.

Upon Almogéirah's Death, Moawiyah, who could never do enough for his Brother Ziyàd, or rather for himſelf, added the Lieutenancy of Cufah to all thoſe vaſt Territories he had entruſted him withal before. He was the firſt that joyned thoſe two great Truſts of Baſorah and Cufah together. When he came firſt to Cufah, having left Baſorah to the Care of Samrah, in his firſt Speech he told the Cufians, That he once had Thoughts of bringing along with him two Thouſand of his Guards, but recollecting that they were honeſt Men, he had brought no other Attendance but only his own Family. They threw Duſt at him; upon which he ſat down and gave private Directions to ſome of his Domeſticks to ſeize the Doors of the Moſque. Then he commanded every Man to ſeize his next Neighbour without pretending to excuſe himſelf, by ſaying, he did not know who he was. This done, he placed himſelf upon a Seat near the Door, and had them brought before him four by four; he made every one of them swear distinctly, It was none of us four that threw Dust. Those that took the Oath he dismissed, they that refused it were bound and laid aside: When he had thus gone through the whole Congregation, there remained thirty, and some say fourscore, that could not take the Oath, whose Hands were all immediately cut off upon the Place.

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 53. cœpit Dec. 26. A. C. 672.

[6] Not long after he entered upon his Government, he issued out an Order that every Citizen should leave his Door open all Night, engaging to be responsible for all the Damage that every particular Person should receive that way; and it happening one Night that some Cattle getting into a Shop, had put some Things out of Order; as soon as Ziyàd was informed of it, he gave every one leave to have a Hurdle or Rake at his Door; which continued in Use ever after, not only in Basorah, but in a great many other Towns of Iràk, of which he was Governour.

[7] One Night his Archers that were upon the Watch, having met with a Shepherd coming through the Town with his Flock, carried him before Ziyàd: The Shepherd excused himself upon the account of his being a Stranger, and ignorant of the Order, which he had caused to be

[6] D'Herbelot. [7] D'Herbelot of Khondemir.

be publiſhed. Ziyàd ſaid to him, I am willing to believe that what thou telleſt me is true: But ſince the Safety of the Inhabitants of this Town depends upon thy Death, it is neceſſary that thou ſhouldeſt die; and inſtantly commanded his Head to be cut off. Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 53. cæpit Dec. 26. A. C. 672.

[2] Now though Ziyàd was ſo ſtrict in ſeeing his Orders punctually executed, and ſevere in inflicting exemplary Puniſhments, yet his Behaviour was gentle in reſpect of that of Samrah his Lieutenant at Baſorah, who was abhorred by all Men for his Cruelty. Ziyàd himſelf was aſhamed of it. For during Ziyàd's ſix Months abſence at Cufah, Samrah had put to Death no leſs than eight Thouſand Perſons at Baſorah. Ziyàd aſked him if he was not afraid leſt in ſuch a Number he might have put to Death one innocent Man. He anſwered, that he ſhould be under no concern, if at the ſame time that he had killed them, he had killed ſo many more. Abu Sawàr ſaid that he killed Seven and Forty of his Men one Morning, every one of which had got the Alcoran by heart.

Once as Samrah's Horſe went out, they met with a Countryman, and one of them ſtruck him through with his Lance. They went on, and Samrah coming up after them, found the poor Man wallowing in his own Blood: Enquiring what was the Matter, he was answered, that the Man meeting the Front of his Horse they had killed him. All that Samrah said to it was only repeating this Verse, When you hear we are mounted beware of our Lances.

[2] Ebnol Athîr. MS. Hunt. Num. 495.

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 53. cæpit Dec. 26. A. C. 672.

When Ziyàd came to Cufah he enquired which was the most Religious Man there. They recommended to him one Abulmogeirah. He sent for him and told him, that if he would keep within his own Doors, and not go out, he would give him as much Money as he desired; the Religious told him, that if he would give him the Empire of the whole World, he would not omit going out to say his Prayers on the [3] Congregation Day. Well then, says Ziyàd, go to the Congregation, but do not talk about any thing. He said he could not help [4] Encouraging that which is good, and reproving that which is Evil. For which Answer Ziyàd commanded him to be Beheaded.

A little before his Death, he gathered the People together, and filled both Mosque, and Street, and Castle with them, in order to impose upon them the Renunciation of Ali. Whilst they were full of Vexation and Perplexity waiting for the Event, one of his Servants came out and told them, that they might go about their

[3] Yaumo'l Jóm-ah. i. e. Friday. [4] It is a Precept frequently repeated in the Alcoran.

Bu-

Buſineſs, for his Maſter was not at Leiſure. The Plague had juſt then ſeized him, and they all looked upon it afterwards as a Providential Deliverance. Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 53. cæpit Dec. 26. A. C. 672.

[5] A Famous Perſian Hiſtorian reports, that the Letter written by Ziyàd to Moawiyah, when he aſked him for the Lieutenancy of Arabia, was expreſſed in theſe Terms. "My left Hand "is here Employed in governing the People of "Irâk: All the mean time my right Hand re- "mains idle. Give it Arabia to govern, and it "will give you a good account of it."

He adds, with ſome little Variation from my Arabick Author above-mentioned, that Moawiyah having granted him this Government, the principal Inhabitants of Medinah, who were afraid of his rough and violent Temper, were very much alarmed; and that Abdollah the Son of [6] Zobeir who was one of them made this publick Prayer to God, Allahómma ectaphi yemin ziyádihi. O God! Satisfy this right Hand, which is idle and ſuperfluous to Ziyàd. There is in theſe Words a very elegant Alluſion to the Name of Ziyàd, which ſignifies in Arabick, Abundant, and Superfluous. And they ſay, that immediately after this Prayer there was a peſti-lential Ulcer in one of his Fingers of his right Hand, of which he died a few Days after.

[5] Khondemir. ſee D'Herbelot in the word Ziad. [6] My Author ſays Abdollah the Son of Amer.

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 53. cœpit Dec. 26. A. C. 672.

There was afterwards a Dynasty of Princes of his Posterity in Arabia Fælix, who Reigned under the Name of the Children of Ziyàd.

There were several Persons, both of the Sect of Ali, and of the Karegites or Hereticks that endeavoured to disturb Ziyàd's Administration, but these Commotions were soon extinguished by his excellent Conduct. The Particulars are to be found at large in our Historians, but I have purposely omitted them, because they would only interrupt the Thread of our History; and contribute nothing either to the Character of any great Man, or the giving light to the Customs and Genius of the People.

This same Fifty third Year Jabalah, the Son of Ayham, the last King of the Tribe of Gasan, who were Christian Arabs, and of whom we have given a large account in the former Volume, died.

[8] We now return to Moawiyah, who in the Fifty fourth Year deposed Saëd from the Government of Medinah, and restored Merwàn the Son of Hakem to it again. Then he wrote to Merwàn to demolish Saëd's House, and seize all his Effects that were in Hejaz. Merwàn came to execute the Caliph's Command, and brought his Mule along with him to carry away whatſoever he found of moſt Value. Saëd was ſurpriſed, and told him he hoped he would not ſerve him ſo. Merwàn anſwered, it muſt needs be ſo: Adding, if Moawiyah had commanded you to have pulled down my Houſe, when you were Governour, you would have done it. Upon this Saëd, produced a Letter of the Caliph's to himſelf, when he was Governor, commanding him to demoliſh Merwàn's Houſe: Which out of Friendſhip he had ventured to diſobey, and by ſo doing incurred the diſpleaſure of the Caliph. Merwan was ſurpriſed at this, and readily acknowledged the ſuperior Generoſity of Saëd's Temper. They both eaſily perceived that this was only a Contrivance of the Caliph's to ſet them at Variance, but it proved the occaſion of uniting them in a ſtricter Friendſhip. Merwàn never left interceding with Moawiyah, till he deſiſted from urging the Execution of that unjuſt Command. Moawiyah was himſelf afterwards aſhamed of his ungenerous Dealing, and aſked their Pardon.

[8] Ebno'l Athîr MS. Hunt. Num. 495.

his

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 54. cæpit Dec. 15. A. C. 673.

This Year Moawiyah depoſed Samrah, who was Ziyàd's Deputy over Baſorah. As ſoon as Samrah heard the News he ſaid, God curſe Moawiyah: If I had ſerved God ſo well as I have ſerved him, he would never have damned me to all Eternity. One of my Authors tells this without any reserve: Another seems to scruple the truth of it.

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 54. cœpit Dec. 15. A. C. 673.

Ziyàd being dead, Obeidollah his Son came to pay his Duty to Moawiyah, who received him very courteously, and enquired of him concerning the Characters and Behaviour of his Father's Deputies in their respective Provinces. He gave him such a satisfactory Account, that he made him Lieutenant of Choraſan, when he was but Five and twenty Years Old. He went to his Charge, and passed over the River as far as the Mountains of Bochára. There he encountered the Turks, and having fought them bravely, he put them to such a precipitate Flight, that the Turkish Queen had only time to put on one of her Buskins, and left the other behind her to the Arabians, who valued it at two Thousand pieces of Gold.

[4] Obeidollah the Son of Ziyàd did not continue long in his Lieutenancy of Choraſan, but was removed to Baſorah; instead of Abdollah the Son of Amrou, who was there before. The Occasion was this. A leading Man of one of the Tribes of the Arabs threw Dust at him, whilst he was Preaching. He followed Ziyàd's Example, and commanded his Hand to be cut off. Upon this some of the same Tribe came to Abdollah and told him, that if the Emperor of the Faithful ſhould know that he had cut off the the Man's Hand for ſuch an Action, he would deal with him, and all that belonged to him, as he had done by Hejer and his Companions. Wherefore, added they, give it us under your hand, that you did it indiſcreetly. This he fooliſhly complied with, imagining to pacify them by doing it, whom he knew to be ſufficiently provoked. They kept the Paper by them for a time, and went with it afterwards to Moawiyah, complaining that his Deputy over Baſorah had cut off their Maſter's Hand upon an Uncertainty; and deſired of him to execute the Law of Retaliation upon him. [3] Moawiyah ſaid, they could have no Retaliation againſt his Deputy; but a Mulct they ſhould have: Which was accordingly paid out of the Treaſury. And Abdollah, to ſatisfy them, was depoſed from his Lieutenancy, and Obeidollah the Son of Ziyàd ſubſtituted in his Room. Obeidollah left Choraſan to one Aſlam a worthleſs Man, who did nothing in the Place that deſerves notice. This ſame Year Merwan, the Son of Hakem, and Governor of Medinah, conducted the Pilgrims to Meccah.

[4] An. Heg. 55. cœpit. Dec. 5. A. C. 674.

Faith-

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 55. cœpit Dec. 5. A. C. 674.

[4] The next Year Moawiyah made Saëd, who was Othman's Grandſon, Lieutenant of Chora-

[3] MS. Hunt. Num. 495. [4] An Heg. 56. cœpit Nov. 24. A. C. 675.

ſan,

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 56. cœpit Nov. 24. A. C. 675.

ſan, who paſſing over the River Jihon, formerly Oxus, went to Samarcand, [1] (afterwards the Capital of the great Tamerlane) and Sogd. Having there routed the Idolaters he went to Tarmud, which ſurrendered to him.

Hitherto the Government had been Elective; but Moawiyah deſigned if poſſible to ſecure the Succeſſion in his own Family, and make it Hereditary. [2] For this end he uſed all the means imaginable to oblige the People to declare his Son Yezid his Heir and Succeſſor. He entertained ſome thoughts of it formerly in the Days of Almogéirah. It ſeems Almogéirah had come to Moawiyah, to beg leave to reſign the Lieutenancy of Cufah; which Moawiyah granted him, in conſideration of his great Age and Infirmities; and deſigned to put Saëd the Son of Aas into his Place. When Almogéirah heard this, he repented himſelf of what he had done: and adviſed Yezid to go to his Father, and deſire him to nominate him his Heir. Upon his coming with this Advice, Moawiyah aſked him who bad him do ſo. He told him Almogéirah; which ſurpriſed Moawiyah, and he reſtored him immediately to his Lieutenancy of Cufah. However this Propoſal wrought upon Moawiyah's Thoughts ſo, that he wrote to Ziyàd to aſk his Advice about it; who did not approve of it by any

[2] Abulpheda. MS. Hunt.

any means, because he knew that Yezid was a profligate young Fellow, wholly given up to Sporting, Gaming and Drinking. Wherefore he sent an intimate Friend of his to Damascus, to divert both the Father and the Son from this Project. This Friend first applied himself to Yezid, and satisfied him that it would be much better to desist, at least for the Present: Afterwards he talked with Moawiyah; till at last they concluded to lay it aside. Thus it rested so long as Ziyàd lived, till now in this Fifty sixth Year, Moawiyah, who was always fond of it, from the time it was first mentioned to him, received it again in good earnest, and wrote circular Letters about it to all the Provinces. The Syrians and Irákians came in to it. Malec, who was then Governor of Medinah, would have had him proclaimed in that City Heir Apparent to his Father: But Hosein the Son of Ali, Abdollah the Son of Amer, Abdorrahmàn the Son of Abubêker and Ayesha's Brother, and Abdollah the Son of Zobéir, absolutely refused it. Their refusal kept the People back. Moawiyah, to encourage the Matter with his Presence, went in Person to Medinah, with a Thousand Horse. He had a Conference with Ayesha about it, and the Result was, that the People in general of the Province of Hejaz came in; but those four before mentioned with their Adherents stood it out to the Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 56. cœpit Nov. 24. A. C. 675.

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 56. cœpit Nov. 24. A. C. 675.

the laſt; though Moawiyah bluſtered in the Moſque, and would have terrified them if he could; they ſtood their ground reſolutely, and let him ſee by their Anſwers that they deſpiſed his Threats; and though he was vehemently angry, he durſt not offer any violence, for they were too conſiderable, and too Popular to ſuffer any Compulſion.

5 After this Moawiyah (or Moawie) took an opportunity of ſaying to his Son Yezid, "Look "you, you ſee I have made the Way plain be- "fore you: There is none that refuſes to come "in, except only theſe four. Hoſein has the "Irakians in his Intereſt, who will never let "him reſt at quiet till they draw him out into "the Field: Remember he is your near Re- "lation, and a Man of a perfect Merit, where- "fore if he comes under your Power let him "go. Abdollah the Son of Amer is a Man whol- "ly given up to Devotion; and when no body "elſe ſtands out he will come in. As for Ab- "dorrahmàn, he is a Man that is guided wholly "by Example, what he ſees other People do, "that he does too. He minds nothing but Wo- "men and Play. But the Man that will attack "thee with the Strength of the Lion, and the "Subtilty of the Fox, is Abdollah the Son of

5 MS. Hunt. Num. 495.

"Zobéir;

" Zobéir; if you get him into your Power, cut " him all to Pieces." Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 58. cœpit Nov. 2. A.C. 677.

[6] In the Fifty eighth Year died Ayesha, Abubeker's Daughter, who had that Name from her; for Becr in Arabick signifies a Girl, and Abu, Father. Mahomet marrying his Daughter Ayesha when she was very Young, his Name was changed into Abubecr, that is the Father of the Girl. She survived her Husband Mahomet a long time, who died in the Eleventh Year of the Hegirah. She was always treated with the utmost Respect, except only that time when she exposed herself in that Expedition against Ali. Sometimes she was called Propheteſs, and generally when any one spoke to her, he qualified her with the Title of Mother of the Faithful. Her Brother Abdorrahmàn, one of those four that stood out against Yezid's Inauguration, died this same Year.

[7] The next Year died Abu Hureirah, that is the Father of the Cat; so Nick-named by Mahomet, because of his fondness of a Cat, which he always carried about with him. He was called so constantly by this Name, that his true Name is not known, nor his Pedigree. He was such a constant Attendant upon Mahomet, that there are a great many Traditions go under his

[6] An Heg. 58. cœpit Nov. 2. A. C. 677. Abulpheda.
[7] An. Heg. 59. cœpit Oct. 22. A. C. 678.

Name.

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 59. cæpit Nov. 22. A. C. 678.

Name. So many, that the Multitude of them make People ſuſpect them: Though others receive them all, as of an undoubted Authority, without the leaſt Heſitation.

[1] I find nothing worth remarking between this great Attempt of Moawiyah, in changing an elective Monarchy, into an Hereditary one, and his Death. Great it may very juſtly be called, conſidering not only the ſtrength of Ali's Party, who though kept under for the preſent, would be ſure to fall into any Meaſures oppoſite to Moawiyah their mortal Enemy; But alſo that there were ſeveral left of the old Society of the Apoſtle, who expected the Diſſolution of Moawiyah, with no leſs Impatience than the Papable Cardinals long for the Poſſeſſion of the Apoſtolick Chair. Beſides that Yezid's Character was ſo obnoxious, that whatſoever it might ſeem in his Father's Eyes, his Uncle Ziyàd, who had both Capacity and Experience enough to underſtand Men, and Courage enough to govern them, thought it too Unpopular to be propoſed to the Provinces. Yet notwithſtanding all theſe Difficulties, Moawiyah ſo managed the Matter, that the Son was more ſecure of ſucceeding the Father, than could have been ſuppoſed, conſidering the very Attempt was a perfect Impoſition and Innovation, and there was

[1] Anno 60.

ſuch

ſuch a vigorous Oppoſition to be expected. [1] As ſoon as it was over, Yezid ſat and gave Audience to the Ambaſſadors, who were ſent from all the Countries round to proffer their Allegiance, and Congratulate him. Amongſt the reſt came old Alahnaph, who was Yezid's Uncle. Moawiyah, who was very fond of his Son, bad Alahnaph diſcourſe him; and to give him a fair Opportunity of trying his Parts, left them ſome time alone. When Alahnaph came out, Moawiyah aſked him what he thought of his Nephew. The old Man very gravely anſwered, If we lye we are afraid of God; if we ſpeak Truth we are afraid of you. You know beſt both his Night and his Day: His inſide and his outſide: His coming in and his going out: And you know beſt what you deſign to do: It is our buſineſs to hear and obey: Your's to give Counſel to the People.

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 60. cæpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

It was part of the Agreement between Moawiyah and Haſan, that after Moawiyah's Deceaſe, the Government ſhould return to Haſan; but he being dead, Moawiyah's Thoughts were entirely bent upon his own Son Yezid; and there either really was in him, or elſe Paternal Tenderneſs made him fancy it, ſomething ſo Grand and Majeſtick, and a Capacity ſo well fitted for the Government of a mighty Empire; that his Father grew every Day more fond of him than

[1] MS. Hunt. Numb. 495.

other;

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 60. cæpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

other; and though in other Respects, a wise and prudent Man, yet could not help frequently expressing in Conversation the great Opinion he entertained of his Abilities. It is said, that once in one of his Harangues to the People after this business was over, he said, O God! If thou knowest that I have settled the Government upon him, because according to the best of my Judgment I think him qualified for it, confirm it to him! But if I have done it out of Affection confirm it not!

[8] The last Speech he made in Publick, when he perceived himself in a weak Condition, was to this Purpose: "I am like the Corn that is "to be reaped, and I have governed you a long "time till we are both weary of one another; "both willing to part. I am superior to who-"soever shall come after me; as my Predeces-"sors were superior to me. Whosoever loves to "meet God, God loves to meet him. O God! "I love to meet thee! do thou love to meet me!" He had not walked far after this before he was taken very ill. [9] When he perceived Death approaching, his Son Yezid being absent, he called the Captain of his Guards to him, and another faithful Servant, and said to them, Remember me to Yezid, and tell him this from me, "Look "upon the Arabians as your Root and Founda-"tion, and whenever they send you any Am-

[8] Ebno'l Athir. [9] MS. Hunt. Num. 495.

"bassa-

" baſſadors treat them with Courteſy and Re- Moawiyah I.
" ſpect. Take care of the Syrians, for they are An. Heg. 60.
" entirely in your Intereſt, and you may depend cœpit Oct. 12.
" upon them whenever you are inſulted by A. C. 679.
" your Enemies: But if ever you have Occa-
" ſion to make Uſe of them out of their own " Country, as ſoon as they have anſwered your " Purpoſe ſend them home again; for they alter
" for the worſe with being abroad. Oblige the " Irakians, though they were to aſk you for a " new Deputy every Day; you had better in ſuch
" a Caſe part with the deareſt Friend you have " in the World, than have a Hundred Thou" ſand Swords drawn upon you. I am not in fear
" for you of any of the Coreiſh but three, Ho-
" ſein, Ben Amer, and Abdollah the Son of Zo- " beir. (Here he repeated the Characters given " of them before) If Abdollah appears againſt
" you oppoſe him; if he offers you Peace ac" cept it, and ſpare the Blood of your People
" as much as lies in your Power."

[3] He reigned nineteen Years, three Months and ſeven and twenty Days, from the Time that the Government came entirely into his Hands upon Haſan's Reſignation. There are different Reports concerning his Age; ſome ſay ſeventy Years, and others ſeventy five. When he was dead, Dehàc the Son of Kais went into the

[3] Abulpheda.

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 60. cœpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

Moſque, and ſtept up into the Pulpit with Moawiyah's Winding-Sheet in his Hand; where having made an Encomium upon him, and ſatisfied the People that he was dead, and that that was his Winding-Sheet, he ſaid the Burying Prayers over him. Yezid was then abſent at a Town called Hawarin, belonging to the Territory of Hems. They wrote to him and deſired his Preſence; but he did not come till after his Father was buried, and then went and prayed at the Tomb.

Moawiyah embraced the Mahometan Religion at the ſame time with his Father, which was in the Year of the Victory. Mahomet made him his Secretary, and Omar gave him the Lieutenancy of Syria four Years of his Reign. Othman continued him in that Poſt during the whole Space of his Reign, which was about twelve Years. Four Years more he kept Syria in his own Hands by Force, whilſt he held up Arms againſt Ali. So that taking all together he had Poſſeſſion of Syria, either as Governour or Chaliph, near forty years.

He was of a merciful Diſpoſition, Couragious, of a quick Capacity, thoroughly ſkilled in the Adminiſtration of Government. [3] His good

[3] The Reader will eaſily perceive that this manner of Expreſſion is not Engliſh but Arabick, as he may obſerve in abundance of Paſſages throughout the whole Book.

Nature

Nature prevailed over his Anger, and the Sweetneſs of his Temper exceeded its Fierceneſs. He was eaſy of Acceſs, and very obliging in his Behaviour. Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 60. cœpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

[3] There is a Tradition that goes under the Name of one Haſan a Baſorian, of great Authority among the Traditioniſts. He ſaid, that there were four Things to be objected againſt Moawiyah, every one of which merited his Deſtruction. 1. That he took the Chaliphate upon him by dint of Sword, without having firſt conſulted the People, amongſt whom, beſides the Companions of the Apoſtle, there were a great many Perſons of Merit and Diſtinction. 2. His leaving the Chaliphate by way of Inheritance to his Son Yezid, a Man of a ſcandalous Character, a Drunkard, a lover of Muſick, and one that wore Silk. 3. His ſcandalous manner of proceeding in the Buſineſs of Ziyàd, when he owned him for his Brother, notwithſtanding the Determination of Mahomet with relation to ſuch Matters. 4. His Cruelty to Hejer and his Companions. Shaphei reports, that he put Abi Rebiyah in Chains, becauſe there were four of the Companions whoſe Teſtimony he rejected, viz. Moawiyah, Amrou, Almogéirah and Ziyàd.

Once there came before him a young Man, and repeated a Copy of Verſes to him, expreſſing

[3] MS. Hunt. Num. 495.

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 60. cœpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

his present Condition. Moawiyah was very well pleased with the Verses. The Arabians delight in Charity, and to address the severest Tyrant of them all after that manner with something that is fanciful and pungent, is the secureſt Way in the World either for a Man to gain his Point, or if Necessity requires it, to save his Neck. The young Man's Case was, he had married a fair Arabian Lass purely for Love, and out of meer Fondness had spent all his Substance, which was very considerable upon her. She was charmingly beautiful; and the Governour of Cufah cast his wanton Eyes upon her, and ravished her from her Husband's Bosom by Force. He, to whom the Loss of his Substance, though it had been all the World, was nothing in respect of her; pierced to the very Heart, and ready to die with Sorrow and Vexation, made his Application to Moawiyah. Moawiyah resolved to do him Justice, and sent an Express to the Governour to resign the Woman. The Governour, who had not the most absurd Taste in the World, told the Express, That if the Chaliph would be pleased to give him Leave to enjoy her one Twelve-Month, he would be contented to have his Head struck off at the end of it. But the Chaliph rigidly insisted upon her being delivered up, and had her brought before him. He was very much surprized at her Beauty, but much much more at the Politeneſs and Elegancy of her Expreſſion. He that had received ſo many Embaſſies, and always converſed with the Greateſt Men of his Country, never in his Life heard ſuch a Torrent of Eloquence as flowed from the Mouth of that charming Arabian. The Chaliph aſked her jocoſely, Whether ſhe would have him, or the Governour, or her Huſband. She anſwered him in Verſe, with the Modeſty that became her Sex, and I forbear to tranſlate her Anſwer, becauſe I deſpair of coming up to the Spirit of it; but the Senſe is, That though what a Perſon in his eminent Station was able to do for her, was beyond her Merit or Expection, yet it could not be put into the Balance againſt everlaſting Damnation. She begged of him, if he deſigned her any Favour, to reſtore her to her own dear Huſband; which he very generouſly performed, and preſented her with a very rich Equipage and plenty of Gold, to repair the ſhattered Circumſtances of her Huſband, who had ſpent a good Fortune upon her.

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 60. cœpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

He was always very munificent. He made a Preſent to Ayeſha of a Bracelet worth an Hundred Thouſand Pieces of Gold, which ſhe accepted. He preſented Haſan with three Hundred Thouſand Pieces, and Abdollah the Son of Zobeir with one Hundred Thouſand. He uſed to bid thoſe that came to ſee him, take any thing they had a mind to. He presented Hosein with a Hundred Thousand Pieces, who divided them among ten of his Acquaintance. An Hundred Thousand more he gave to Abdollah, the Son of Jaafar, who gave them to his Wife at her Request. He presented Merwân, the Son of Hakem, afterwards Chaliph, with an Hundred Thousand Pieces, who divided half of them amongst his Friends. At another time he presented Hasan with four Millions.

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 60. cœpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

4 It happened that Sapor, who had seized Armenia by Force of Arms, sent an Ambassador named Sergius, to Moawiyah, desiring his Assistance against the Grecian Emperor; who at the same Time sent one Andrew an Eunuch, a great Favourite. Moawiyah told them, That they were both equally Enemies, and that he would assist that Side that offered him most. There was some Altercation between the two Ambassadors; Sergius reproached the Eunuch with the Loss of his Virility; the other in Return called him Sodomite. But after their Audience was over, Andrew the Eunuch was revenged upon his Antagonist; for he gave Directions to the Officers upon the Frontiers, who seized him in his Return, castrated him, and dismissed him with his Testicles about his Neck.

4 Abulpheragius.

Moa-

[4] Moawiyah was the first Chaliph that introduced the Mekſourah into the Moſque; that is a Place raiſed above, and ſeparate from the reſt; where the Chaliph, who was as well chief Pontiff in Religious, as Sovereign in Civil Affairs, began and chanted the Prayers, which are, as one may ſay, the publick Office of the Muſlemans; and it was in the ſame Place that he made the Cotbah to the People, which is a ſort of Homily or Preachment; [5] and uſed, before his Time, always to follow the Prayers; but he began with it firſt, for fear he ſhould forget what he had prepared to ſay. Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 60. cœpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

[6] He was the firſt Chaliph that obliged the People to ſwear Allegiance to his Son: The firſt that laid Poſt Horſes upon the Roads: the firſt that made a Mekſourah; and the firſt that ſpoke to the People ſitting.

[7] An Arabian Robber being once condemned to have his Hand cut off, Moawiyah pardoned him for the ſake of four very ingenious Verſes that he made and repeated to him in the Field. They remark, that this was the firſt Sentence pronounced among the Muſlemans that was not put in Execution; the Chaliphs not having as yet, till Moawiyah, taken the Liberty of ſhewing Favour to thoſe whom the ordinary Judges had condemned.

[4] Abulpheda. D'Herbelot. [5] Abulpheragius. [6] Abulpheda. [7] D'Herbelot from Rabialakyar.

Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 60. cœpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

[3] Abulpheda records this following Account of him, as a remarkable Instance of his Patience and Clemency. Arwah the Daughter of Hareth, the Son of Abdolmutáleb the Son of Hashem, came to make him a Visit: She was his Aunt, a very old Woman, and of Ali's Branch of the Family: As soon as Moawiyah had saluted her, she began to reproach him, O Nephew, said she, you have been very ungrateful, and injurious to your Cousin, who was a Companion (of the Apostle;) and you called your self by a Name that was none of your own; and took Possession of what you had no Right to. And our Family exceeded all Men in Sufferings for this Religion, till God took his Prophet to reward his Labours, and to exalt his Station: And then you insulted us, and we were amongst you like the Children of Israel in the Family of Pharaoh: Though Ali, after the Prophet, was as Aaron was to Moses. Amrou, who was then present, had no Patience, but took her up and said, Hold your Tongue old Woman, and do not talk thus like one out of your Wits. What, says she, do you prate you Son of a Whore, when your Mother was the most notorious and cheapest Strumpet in all Meccah; and when she was examined concerning five of the Coreish, she confessed that she had lain with them all; and that you must belong to him

[3] Abulpheda.

whom

whom you reſembled moſt; you proving moſt like old Aáſi, he was forced to father you. Moawiyah only ſaid to her, God forgive what is paſt, what would you have? She anſwered, Two Thouſand Pieces to buy an Eſtate for the Poor of our Family; and two Thouſand more to marry our poor Relations; and two Thouſand more for my ſelf to ſecure me in Time of Extremity: Which was all, by Moawiyah's Command, paid down to her immediately. Moawiyah I. An. Heg. 60. cœpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

This Chaliph was buried in Damaſcus, where he had eſtabliſhed the Seat of the Chaliphate: And that City always preſerved that Prerogative ſo long as the Ommiades, or Deſcendants of Moawiyah reigned there; till the Time of the Abbaſides, who transferred it to Anbar, Haſchemyah and Bagdad. The Inſcription of his Seal was, Every Work hath its Reward, or as others ſay, There is no Strength but in God.

The

The Second Chaliph of the Houſe of Ommiyah, (being the Seventh from Mahomet.)

YEZID,

The Son of Moawiyah.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 60. cœpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

[1] YEZID, the Son of Moawiyah, was inaugurated Chaliph on the New Moon of the Month Rejeb, of the ſixtieth Year of the Hegirah, which falls in with the Seventh Day of April, in the Year of our Lord Six Hundred and Eighty. He was born in the twenty ſixth Year of the Hegirah, according to which Account he was thirty four (Lunar) Years old when he was ſaluted Emperor. He was forthwith acknowledged lawful Chaliph in Syria, Meſopotamia, Ægypt and Perſia, and all the other Mahometan Countries, except the Cities of Meccah and Medinah, and ſome others of Chaldea, that refuſed to ſubmit themſelves to him: And among the Great Ones there were none

[1] MS. Hunt. Num. 495. Abulpheda.

none but Hoſein, and Abdollah the Son of Zobeir, that diſputed the Chaliphate with them to their Death. YEZID I. An. Heg. 60. cœpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

He kept all his Father's Lieutenants and Officers in their Places, without ſo much as removing one of them. The Governour of Medinah was Waled the Son of Otbah; of Cufah, Nooman the Son of Báſhir; of Baſorah, Obeidollah the Son of Ziyàd; of Meccah, Abdollah Amrou. As ſoon as he came to the Government, he had nothing ſo much at Heart, as the bringing in thoſe that had oppoſed his being nominated his Father's Heir and Succeſſor. Concerning this Affair, he wrote a Letter to Waled his Governor in Medinah, as follows; In the Name of the moſt Merciful God. From Yezid Emperor of the Faithful to Waled the Son of Otbah. Moawiyah was one of the Servants of God, who honoured him, and made him Chaliph, and extended his Dominions and eſtabliſhed him. He lived his appointed Time, and God took him to his Mercy. He lived beloved, and he died pure and innocent. Farewell. Hold Hoſein and Abdollah the Son of Amer, and Abdollah the Son of Zobéir cloſe to the Inauguration without any Remiſſion or Relaxation. Waled upon the Receipt of this Letter, ſent for Merwan the Son of Hakem, and conſulted him concerning the Contents of it. Merwan was of Opinion, that he ſhould ſend for them and tender tender them the Oath, before they were appriſed of the Chaliph's Death; and upon their Refuſal ſhould ſtrike their Heads off. Either this was not ſo cloſely concerted but they received ſome private Intelligence; or elſe they ſuſpected it themſelves: Which way ſoever it was, when Waled's Meſſenger came to them, who found them at the Moſque, they ſent him back with this Anſwer, That they were coming. After a ſhort Deliberation, Hoſein went to the Governour's Houſe, attended with a ſufficient Number of his Friends and Domeſticks, whom he placed about the Door, with Orders to come in if they ſhould hear any Diſturbance. The Governour having acquainted him with Moawiyah's Deceaſe, invited him to own his Allegiance to Yezid. He anſwered, That Men of his Diſtinction did not uſe to do Things of that Nature in private; neither did he expect that he would ever have deſired it of him; that he thought it better to ſtay till all the People were met together, according to the Cuſtom upon ſuch Occaſions, and do it unanimouſly. Waled conſented: But Merwan, who could eaſily ſee through this Excuſe, (as the Governour did too) ſaid to the Governour, If he does not do it now before he goes away, there will be a great deal of Blood ſhed between you and him; wherefore hold him cloſe, and do not let him go go out till he hath given his Allegiance, otherwiſe ſtrike his Head off. Hoſein leaped out, and having firſt reproached Merwàn for his Advice, went to his own Houſe. Merwàn ſwore to the Governour, that he was never like to ſee Hoſein any more. The Governor told him, he did not trouble himſelf about it; adding, that he had every Thing he deſired in this World, and that he did not believe that that Man's Balance would be light in the next that ſhould be guilty of the Murder of Hoſein. It is an Article of the Mahometan Faith, that at the laſt Day there ſhall be a Balance ſupported by the Divine Power, that ſhall extend to the utmoſt Limits of Heaven and Earth, in which the moſt minute Actions of mortal Men ſhall be weighed; and he whoſe evil Deeds outweigh his good ones, ſhall be damned; on the contrary, he whoſe good Deeds overbalance his evil ones, ſhall be ſaved. For this Reaſon Waled ſaid, That his Balance would not be light, (meaning that wherein his evil Deeds were put) that ſhould kill Hoſein. Then Waled ſent for Abdollah the Son of Zobéir, who put him off for the Space of four and twenty Hours; and taking along with him all his Family, and his Brother Jaafar, departed for Meccah, Waled ſent a Party of Horſe to purſue him, but to no Purpoſe. Whilſt Waled was thus taken up with Abdollah, he had little Time to take Notice of Hoſein, who whenever he ſent for him, put him off with an Excuſe, and in the mean time made all the ſecret Preparation he could to follow Abdollah. He left none of all his Family behind him except his Brother Mahomet Hanifiyah, who before they parted, expreſſing the moſt tender Affection and Concern for him that can be imagined, adviſed him by no Means to venture himſelf in any of the Provinces, but to lye cloſe either in the Deſarts or the Mountains, till his Friends were gathered together in a conſiderable Body, and then he might truſt himſelf with them. But if he was reſolved to go into any Town, he ſhould prefer Meccah; where if he met with the leaſt Appearance of any Thing that diſguſted him, he ſhould immediately withdraw and retire to the Mountains: Hoſein having thanked him heartily for his ſincere Advice, made the beſt of his Way to Meccah, where he met with Abdollah.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 60. expit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 60. cæpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

to

YEZID I. An. Heg. 60. cœpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

Yezid, not well pleaſed with Waled's Remiſneſs, removed him from the Government of Medinah, and gave it to Amrou the Son of Saëd, who was Governour of Meccah. He was a very proud Man. He gave Amer the Son of Zobéir a Commiſſion to March againſt his Brother Abdollah, whom he mortally hated. Abdollah engaged him in the Field, routed him, and put him in Priſon, where he kept him till he died.

Now

YEZID I. An. Heg. 60. cœpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

Now though Abdollah ſeemed to have Intereſt ſufficient to carry his Point, and had beat down all Oppoſition before him, and the Medinians had openly declared for him, ſo that his Fame was ſpread round about the Country: Yet Hoſein's Glory outſhined him, ſo that he could not tell how to propoſe any thing that he deſigned to the People, ſo long as he was there: Who both upon the account of his near Relation to Mahomet, and his own perſonal Qualifications, was reverenced above all Men alive. Moawiyah ſo long as he lived, treated him with the utmoſt Reſpect: And when Haſan had reſigned to Moawiyah, both he and his Brother Hoſein uſed to viſit him frequently, and he always received them courteouſly, and never failed to diſmiſs them with noble Preſents. After Haſan's Death, Hoſein uſed to ſend to him often, and paid him a Viſit once every Year, and went with his Son Yezid in his Expedition againſt Conſtantinople. Hoſein was the Hopes of all the Irakians; never were People more overjoyed than they were at the Death of Moawiyah, whom they had all along deteſted as a Tyrant and Uſurper. They thought that now there was a Period put to all their Slavery, and they ſhould be under the gentle Government, of a Man that was ſprung of an almoſt divine Race. The Cufians were ſo impatient, that they ſent Meſſage after after Meſſage to him, aſſuring him that if he would but once make his Appearance amongſt them, he ſhould not only be ſecure as to his own Perſon, but in conſideration of the Eſteem which they had for his Father Ali, and his Family, they would render him their Homages, and acknowledge him for the only lawful and true Chaliph. They aſſured him that there was no manner of difficulty in the Matter; all the Country being entirely devoted to ſerve him with their Lives and Fortunes. The Meſſengers they had ſent one after another, came to him all together, preſſing him with the utmoſt Vehemency, to what he himſelf had no Averſion to: Only he thought it a part of a prudent Man to uſe a little Caution and Circumſpection, in an Affair of ſo great Conſequence, and attended with ſo much hazard. Wherefore he firſt ſends his Couſin Muſlim into Irak, to feel the Pulſe of the People, and ſee whether or no they were ſo unanimouſly in his Intereſt as had been repreſented. Ordering him, that if he found it ſo, he ſhould head a Body of them, and beat down all Oppoſition if there ſhould be any: Beſides he gave him a Letter to the Cufians to that purpoſe. Muſlim left Meccah, and paſſed through Medinah, from whence he took along with him a couple of Guides, who led him into a vaſt Deſart, where there was no Road: One of them

YEZID I. An. Heg. 60. cœpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

pe-

periſhed with Thirſt, and the other ſoon after died of the Cholick. This unproſperous Beginning ſeemed ominous to Muſlim, and diſcouraged him to that degree, that, having found a Place where there was Water, he would not ſtir a ſtep further in his Journey, till he had diſpatched a Meſſenger to Hoſein for further Inſtructions. Hoſein ordered him to go on to Cufah by all means, and act purſuant to thoſe Directions he had received before. When he came to Cufah, he communicated his Buſineſs privately to ſuch as he could truſt, and the Matter was whiſpered about ſo dexterouſly, that they reckoned themſelves ſecure of Eighteen Thouſand, before Yezid's Deputy Nómàn had heard one word of it. Muſlim, ſufficiently ſatisfied with this Succeſs, did not defer acquainting Hoſein with it: He wrote to him, and told him, that every thing was made plain and eaſie for him now; and that nothing was wanting but his Preſence. Upon this notice, he ſet out upon his Journey from Meccah to Cufah.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 60. cæpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

Nómàn at laſt received Information of the increaſing Intereſt of Hoſein, and the forwardneſs of his Party; he was both ſurpriſed and concerned; and made a Speech to the People, wherein he exhorted them to a peaceful Behaviour, and to avoid all manner of Strife and Contention: Aſſuring them that for his own part he would not be the Aggreſſor, nor meddle with any Perſon, unleſs he was firſt inſulted himſelf; nor would he take up any Man upon Suſpicion; But he ſwore by that God, beſides whom is no other, that if they revolted from their Imàm [Yezid] and withdrew their Allegiance, he would fight as long as he could hold his Sword in his Hand. One that ſtood by, told him that this was a Matter that required ſtirring, but that he talked like one of the weak Ones. He anſwered that He had rather be one of the weak ones in obedience to God, than one of the ſtrong ones in rebelling againſt him. And with thoſe words he came down. News of this was carried to Yezid, who ſent immediately, and removed Nómàn from the Lieutenancy of Cufah, and gave it to Obeidollah the Son of Ziyàd, together with that of Baſorah, which he had before. This he did at the inſtance of Sarchun, the Son of Moawiyah: For before that time he was not affected well towards Obeidollah, probably becauſe his Father Ziyàd was againſt his being declared Heir to Moawiyah.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 60. cœpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

Upon this Obeidollah went from Baſorah to Cufah. He rode into the Town in the Evening, with a black Turbant on, (which was Hoſein's Dreſs) and he could not paſs along and ſalute the Crowd, but he was reſaluted by the Title of the Son of the Apoſtle; they imagining that it it had been Hoſein of whoſe coming they were in hourly Expectation. But to their no ſmall Grief and Mortification, they were ſoon undeceived, when ſome of Obeidollah's Retinue ſaid to them; Stand off, it is the Emir Obeidollah. He went directly with his Retinue to the Caſtle (they were but ſeventeen Horſe in all) and began to think of proper Means for the extinguiſhing this Sedition. For this purpoſe, he gives three Thouſand Pieces for a Show to one of his Domeſticks, whoſe Buſineſs it was to pretend, that he came out of Syria on purpoſe to this Inauguration of Hoſein. Muſlim had a Houſe in Town, where he polled great Numbers every Day. Obeidollah's Man managed his Buſineſs ſo well, that he eaſily gained Credit to his Story, and was introduced to Muſlim who took down his Vote for Hoſein. And to colour the Matter, he gave ſome of his Money towards the buying Arms, to one that Muſlim had ſingled out for that Office, whoſe Buſineſs it was to receive all the Money that was contributed by the Party for that purpoſe. He continued among them the ſpace of a few Days, till he had ſufficiently informed himſelf of all their Circumſtances, and then made his Report to Obeidollah. Muſlim had changed his Quarters, which at firſt he had taken up at Hani's Houſe, and removed to Sharik's, who was one of the grand Omeras; Sha-

YEZID I. An. Heg. 60. cæpit Oct. 12. A.C. 679.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 60. cœpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

rik was then Sick, and they being informed that Obeidollah designed him a Visit, contrived to place Muslim in a Corner to kill him. The Signal agreed upon, was when the sick Man should call for Water. Afterwards Obeidollah came attended by Hani and one Servant. They sat down (except the Servant) and talked with Sharik a while, but Muslim had not Courage enough to stir. [1] The Girl that was bringing the Water, spying Muslim standing there was ashamed, and went back with it three times. At last he called out loud, Bring me some Water, though it kills me. This made Obeidollah's Man suspect, that there was something more than ordinary in the Matter; so he gave a hint to his Master, who leaped forth immediately. When they were gone, Hani and Sharik asked Muslim, why he did not kill him. He answered he had heard a Tradition of the Apostle who had said, The Faith is contrary to Murther: Let not a Believer murther a Man unawares. Wherefore, he said, he durst not kill him in his House. They told him that if he had done it, no body would have concerned themselves to revenge his Death, and they could have secured him in the Possession of the Castle. Sharik died three Days after. As for Hani, upon Obeidollah's commanding the [2] Registers to be strictly searched, under

[1] MS. Hunt. Numb. 495. [2] See Esther vi. 1.

the

the ſevereſt Penalty, he was found ſtanding upon Record, as an old Offender, and one that had oppoſed Obeidollah before. Obeidollah remembered him, and ſent ſome of the Omeras, who would not let him alone till they brought him along with them to the Caſtle. When he came there, Obeidollah aſked him what was become of Muſlim. He at firſt pretended to know nothing of him, but being confronted by Obeidollah's Servant who had ſeen Muſlim at his Houſe, and paid him Money to buy Arms for the Service of Hoſein, he had nothing elſe to ſay for himſelf, but that Muſlim intruded himſelf upon him into his Houſe, and did not come thither by his Invitation. Obeidollah commanded him to produce him. He anſwered, that if he was under his Feet, he would not take them off from him. At this Obeidollah gave him ſuch a Blow with his Mace, that he wounded him in the Face, and broke his Noſe. Hani had like to have ſeized one of the Swords of the Guards, but was prevented. Obeidollah told him he had forfeited his Life, and commanded him to be impriſoned in a Room in the Caſtle. The People of his Tribe came flocking about the Caſtle, imagining that he was Murdered; but the Kádi ſent one to tell them, that he was detained only to be aſked ſome Queſtions about Muſlim, and bad them be at quiet, and go peaceably to their

YEZID I. An. Heg. 60. cœpit Oct. 12. A.C. 679.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 60. cœpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

Houſes, for though the Emir had ſtruck him, it would not affect his Life. Muſlim having heard this News mounted his Horſe, and gave the word [7] Ya Menſour Ommet! Which was the Signal agreed upon among Hoſein's Party. Four Thouſand joined him, and he conducted them towards the Caſtle under two Colours, the one Red, the other Green. Obeidollah was then in the Caſtle Priſon, diſcourſing concerning Hani's Buſineſs, and cautioning them againſt Sedition. The Omera's and chief Men ſat under him, when the Watch came and ſupriſed them all, with the News of Muſlim's Appearance before the Caſtle. Obeidollah ſent ſeveral Men of Note and Authority among the People, out of the Caſtle, who rode backwards and forwards diſſwading them from hazarding themſelves upon ſuch an account: And bade thoſe that were with him, look out of the Caſtle, and encourage the Loyaliſts. A Woman called out to Muſlim, and told him, he might go about his Buſineſs, for the People would find him Work enough. They conſidering that the Event was dubious, began to deſert by degrees, till Muſlim had no more than Thirty Men left with him, ſo he retired in the Evening and hid himſelf. Taking the Opportunity of the Twilight, he departed from Cufah, without ſo much as a Guide left [7] O thou that art helped by the People! meaning Hoſein.

to

to ſhew him the Way, or any one to comfort him, or give him Shelter. Night came on, and he was upon the Road alone in the Dark, not knowing one ſtep of the Way, nor whither he was going. At laſt he found a Houſe ſtanding alone in the Field, and knocked at the Door: There came to him an old Woman, one that in the Days of her Youth and Beauty had belonged to a great Man, but afterwards had a Son by another, whom ſhe expected out of the Field. Muſlim aſked her for ſome Water, which when ſhe had given him, and perceived that he made no haſte to go away, ſhe told him that it was not convenient for him to ſtand there at her Door, neither would ſhe allow it. At laſt he let her underſtand that it was in her Power to do a thing that ſhe ſhould have no Reaſon to repent of. She aſked him what it was. He told her his Name was Muſlim, and that the People of the Country had deceived him. She no ſooner heard his Name, but ſhe readily let him in, and having conveyed him into the moſt ſecret and retired Part of her Houſe, made the beſt Proviſion for him ſhe was able. At laſt her Son came home, and obſerving his Mother going backwards and forwards very often, would not reſt ſatisfied, till ſhe had acquainted him with the occaſion of it, which to ſatisfy his Importunity ſhe did, having firſt enjoyned him Secrecy.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 60. cæpit Oct. 19. A. C. 670.

YEZID I. An Heg. 60. cœpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

But he, having heard that Obeidollah had promiſed a Reward to whoſoever ſhould diſcover Muſlim, went and informed in the Morning: So that before Muſlim well knew where he was, he found himſelf ſurrounded with Threeſcore and ten, or Fourſcore Horſe. He betook him to his Sword, and defended himſelf bravely, for he beat them thrice out of the Houſe. They pelted him with Stones, and put Fire upon the ends of Canes, and flung at him; then he went out and fought abroad: Till at laſt overpowered with Numbers, and grievouſly wounded in a great many Places, particularly both his Lips almoſt cut to Pieces, he was ſeized and diſarmed, and bound and mounted upon his own Mule. When he perceived that it was quite out of his Power to help himſelf, he wept. One of the Men that was preſent told him, that it did not become a Man that came about ſuch a great Undertaking to weep: He anſwered, that it was not upon his own account, but for the ſake of Hoſein and his Family, who he feared were upon their Journey from Meccah to Cufah, and as he ſuppoſed came out either that very Day, or the Day before. Then turning to Mohammed, the Son of Aláſhat, he begged of him, if it was poſſible, to ſend to him in his Name, to intreat him to go back: Which Mohammed performed, but the Meſſenger did not do his part.

When

When Muſlim came to the Caſtle Gate, there ſtood a great many of the Omera's, ſome of which he knew, and others knew him, waiting for Admiſſion to Obeidollah. He was very deſirous to drink a draught of Water, but one of the Men told him he ſhould have no Drink, till he drank the Hamim, that is the ſcalding Liquor which the Mahometans feign ſhall be the Drink of the Damned in Hell. Obeidollah appearing, Muſlim did not Salàm or ſalute him; which when they wondered at, he ſaid if Yezid were there himſelf, he ſhould not think himſelf obliged to do it, unleſs he would give him his Life. Obeidollah told him that he had come thither to make a Diſturbance, and ſow the Seeds of Diviſion amongſt People that were all unanimous, and all agreed upon the ſame thing. Muſlim reſolutely anſwered, It is not ſo: But the People of this Province know very well, that your Father Ziyàd has killed the beſt of their Men, and ſhed their Blood, and exerciſed over them the Tyranny of a Coſroes or a Cæſar; and we come to govern with Juſtice, and appeal to the Determination of the Book. Obeidollah called him Rogue, and told him he did not uſe to appeal to the Determination of the Book, when he was tippling Wine at Medinah. For the truth of which Accuſation, Muſlim appealed to God. Having leave given him to make his Will, he whiſwhiſpered one of his Friends, and left him ſeven Hundred Pieces; deſiring him to beg his dead Body of Obeidollah, and to take care to prevent Hoſein's advancing any further in his Journey. He was overheard by one that ſtood by, who told every Word he ſaid to Obeidollah. He did not diſapprove of any one Article in it, and as for Hoſein he ſaid, if he would be at quiet no body would meddle with him, but if he was the Aggreſſor, they would not flinch from him. Muſlim was then carried to the top of the Caſtle and Beheaded. The Head was firſt thrown down to the Bottom, and the Body after it. Then Hani was brought forth and Beheaded in the Street. Both the Heads were ſent for a Preſent to Yezid, with a Letter ſpecifying their ſeveral Circumſtances. This was on the Eighth Day of the Month Dulhagiah in the Sixtieth Year of the Hegirah.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 60. cœpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 60. cæpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

The earneſt and repeated Sollicitations of the Cufians made Hoſein reſolve to accept their Invitation, and go directly to Cufah. They had ſent him in a Poll of an Hundred and forty Thouſand: Which together with their Letters he bundled up, and carried along with him. The wiſeſt of his Friends looked upon it as a degree of Madneſs in him, to embark himſelf in ſuch a deſperate Undertaking. At laſt they said, that if he was resolved to go, it was his Destiny that precipitated him. [4] Abdollah the Son of Abbas told him, that there was a Report spread of his intended Journey to Cufah, and desired to know what he meant by it. Hosein told him, that if it pleased God, he was resolved upon it. The Son of Abbas answered, that indeed if the Cufians had taken Arms, killed their Emir [Obeidollah] and taken the whole Country into their own Hands, and then invited him to come and take the Government upon him, there would be something in it, and he should advise him to go: But that so long as they were under the Command of their Emir, whose Forces were dispersed throughout all those Territories for the Security of the Country, they had in effect at best only invited him to a War; and that he had no Security that they would not oppose him, and that they who had been the forwardest in appearing in his Interest, might not in the end prove his greatest Enemies. Hosein said he would leave the Event to God. After this Abdollah the Son of Zobeir came to make him a Visit, and enquire into his Design. Among other Discourse he said, I do not see any Reason why we should leave every thing to the disposal of these Men, when we are the

ſaid

YEZID I. An. Heg. 60. cœpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

[4] MS. Hunt. Num. 495.

Sons

YEZID I. An. Heg. 60. cæpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

Sons of the Mahogerins or Refugees, and have a better Right and Claim to the Government than they. Hoſein told him that the chief of the Nobility had written to him, and that his Sect (the Shii) were all ready to ſtand up for him to a Man. To which the Son of Zobéir anſwered, that if he had ſuch a Sect to ſtand up for him, he would not omit the Opportunity. Hoſein eaſily ſaw through his Meaning; for Abdollah, who was a Man of a reſtleſs aſpiring Temper, knew very well that all his own Pretenſions would be in vain, ſo long as Hoſein was alive, but if any thing ſhould befall him, the way to the Caliphate would be made clear for himſelf; which Hoſein took notice of as ſoon as he was gone. Abdollah the Son of Abbàs was ſtill very uneaſie; and reſolved to leave no means unattempted to diſſwade him from his Undertaking. He came to him again, and repreſented to him the fickle Temper of the Irakians, and intreated him to ſtay at leaſt till they had got rid of their Enemy the Emir, and then either to go to them, or elſe into that part of Hejaz, where there were Places of Strength: That he ſhould keep himſelf retired, and write circular Letters to all his Friends, till they had formed a Body, and were capable of appearing for him to ſome Advantage; that then he hoped Things would ſucceed according to his Deſire. Hoſein told him,

he

he knew that he adviſed him as a Friend. At leaſt, added the Son of Abbàs, if you be reſolved to go, do not take your Wives and Children along with you, for, by God, I fear your Caſe will be like Othman's, who was murdered whilſt his Wives and Children ſtood looking on: Beſides, you have rejoiced the Heart of Abdollah the Son of Zobéir, in leaving him behind you in Hejaz: And by that God, beſides whom there is no other, if I knew that my taking you by the Hair of the Head, till they came in and parted us, would be a Means to detain you at Meccah, I would do it. Then he left him, and meeting with Abdollah the Son of Zobéir, he told him, he had no Reaſon to be ſad, and immediately repeated Ya lekà ming kobéiratin, &c.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 60. cœpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

Wherein the Arabian Poet elegantly addreſſes himſelf to the Lark, and bids her, whilſt the the Field and Seaſon favoured her, enjoy her ſelf, and ſing, and delight in her young Ones, and whatſoever elſe would entertain her; but let her aſſure herſelf ſhe ſhould not eſcape the Nets of the Fowler.

[2] No Advice taking Place with Hoſein, though Abdollah the Son of Abbàs had ſat up with him all Night to no Purpoſe, he ſet out from Meceah with a competent Retinue on the eighth Day of the Month Dulhagiah, being the very ſame Day on which his Couſin Muſlim was killed at Cufah, (though ſome ſay the Day before) concerning whom he had received no other Intelligence than what he had ſent him, that all Things went well. The Emir Obeidollah was very well appriſed of Hoſein's Approach; who when he came as far as Aſsheràph met with a Body of a Thouſand Horſe, under the Command of Harro the Son of Yezid, of the Tribe of Temimah, a Man no way diſaffected to Hoſein's Intereſt. Hoſein's Men had been for Water at the River, and drawn a great deal for the Horſes, which he did not make uſe of for himſelf alone, but ordered them to water their Horſes of his Enemies. At Noon he commanded the People to be called together, acording to the Cuſtom of the Mahometans, and came out to them with nothing but his Veſt, his Girdle and his Shoes, and alledged the Invitation of the Cufians as the Reaſon of his undertaking that Expedition. Then he aſked Harro, if he would pray amongſt his Men; who anſwered, that after him he would. They parted that Night and went every Man to his Tent, and the next Day Hoſein made a Speech to them, wherein he aſſerted his Title, and exhorted them to ſubmit to him, and oppoſe all that ſtood againſt him, who pretended to uſurp Authority over the People wrongfully. Harro told him, That he did not know who who had writ to him, nor what it was; and on Hoſein's producing the Letter, Harro ſaid, after he had read a little of it, We are none of thoſe that had any Hand in writing of it, and we are commanded as ſoon as we meet you to bring you directly to Cufah into the Preſence of Obeidollah the Son of Ziyad. Hoſein told him, That he would ſooner die than ſubmit to that, and gave the Word of Command to his Men to ride; but Harro wheeled about and intercepted them; which provoked Hoſein to ſay, [6] May your Mother be childleſs of you! (a common curſe amongſt the Arabians.) What do you mean? Harro anſwered If any Man but your ſelf had ſaid ſo much to me, I would have had Satisfaction, but I have no room to mention your Mother without the greateſt Reſpect. Then ſpeaking to his Men they retreated, and he told Hoſein, That he had no Commiſſion to fight with him, but was commanded not to part with him till he had conducted him to Cufah. But he bad him chuſe any Road that did not go directly to Cufah, or back again to Medinah; and do you, ſays he, write to Yezid or Obeidollah, and I will write to Obeidollah, perhaps it may pleaſe God I may meet with ſomething that may bring me off, without my being expoſed to any Extremity upon your Account.

[2] MS. Laud. Num. 161. A.

on

YEZID I. An. Heg. 60. cœpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 60. cæpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

[6] Arab. Thacolátka Ommoka.

Hoſein

YEZID I. An. Heg. 60. cæpit Nov. 12. A. C. 679.

Hoſein upon this turned a little out of the Way that leads to Adib and Kadiſia, and Harro told him, that it was his Opinion, that if he would be the Aggreſſor and firſt ſet upon the Cufians, he might gain his Point; but if he ſuffered himſelf to be attacked he would periſh. Hoſein aſked him, if he thought to terrify him with Death. When they came to Adib they met with four Horſemen, who turned out of the Way to come up to Hoſein. Alharro would have rode between them and Hoſein, but he would not permit it. Thirmàh was their Guide, whom as ſoon as they came up Hoſein aſked what News; Thirmah anſwered, All the Nobility are againſt you to a Man; as for the reſt their Hearts are with you, but to morrow their Swords will be drawn againſt you. Hoſein aſked him if he could tell any Tidings of his Meſſenger Kais (one that he had ſent before him to prepare the Way) Thirmàh ſaid, As for your Meſſenger Kais he was brought before Obeidollah, who commanded him to curſe you and your Father Ali; inſtead of which he ſtood up and prayed for you and your Father, and curſed Obeidollah and his Father Ziyàd, and perſuaded the People to come into your Aſſiſtance, and gave them Notice of your coming. For which Obeidollah commanded him to be thrown down headlong from the Top of the Caſtle. At this News Hoſein wept,

and

and repeated this Verſe of the Alcoran, There are ſome of them who are already dead, and ſome of them that ſtay in Expectation and have not changed. He then added, O God! let their Manſions be in Paradiſe, and gather us and them together, in the fixed reſting Place of thy Mercy, and the delights of thy Reward. Then ſays, Thirmàh to him, "I "do not think theſe People that are along with "you a ſufficient Match for thoſe that are a-"gainſt you. How is it poſſible, when all the "Plains of Cufah are full of Horſe and Foot "ready to meet you? I beg of you, for God's "ſake if it be poſſible, do not go a ſpan's breadth "nearer to them; but if you pleaſe, I will con-"duct you to our impregnable Mountain Aja, "in which God hath ſecured us from the Kings "of Gaſan and Hamyar, and from [3] Nòoman the "Son of Almundir, and from both the Black "and the Red. And if any Calamity befalls "us, you may retire thither, and then ſend to "the Tribe of Tay, and ſtay among us as long "as you pleaſe; for I believe there will be no "leſs than Ten Thouſand of that Tribe with "their Swords ready at your Service, and by "God, no body ſhall ever get at us. Hoſein "ſaid, God reward thee; but ſtill perſiſted in his Resolution of going forwards, and Thirmah "took his Leave."

YEZID I. An. Heg. 60. cœpit Oct. 12. A. C. 679.

[3] Concerning him ſee Socrates Hiſt. Eccleſiaſt. Lib. VII. Cap. 18.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

[4] When Night came on, he ordered his Men to provide as much Water as they should have Occasion for, and continued his March in the Night. As he went on he nodded a little, and waking on a sudden, said, We belong to God, and to him we return. I saw a Horseman, who said, Men travel by Night, and the Destinies travel by Night towards them. This I know to be a Message of our Deaths. In the Morning after the Prayers were over he mended his Pace, and taking Left Hand Road came to Nineve, (not the Ancient, but another Town of the same Name) and as he rode, with his Bow upon his Shoulders, there came up a Person who saluted Alhárro, but took no Notice of him. He delivered a Letter to Alhárro, containing Orders from Obeidollah, to lead Hosein and his Men into a Place where there was neither Town nor Fortification, till his Messengers and Forces should come up. This was on Friday the second Day of the Month Moharram, in the sixty first Year of the Hegirah, that is on the first Day of October, in the Year of our Lord Six Hundred and Eighty.

The Day after Amer the Son of Saëd came up with four Thousand Men, which Obeidollah

[4] MS. Laud. Num. 161. A.

had had ordered to Deilam. They had pitched their Tents without the Walls of Cufah, and when they heard of Hoſein's coming, Obeidollah commanded Amer to defer his intended March to Deilam, and go againſt Hoſein. Amer begged his Pardon, and when Obeidollah threatned him upon his Refuſal, he deſired Time to conſider of it: Every one that he adviſed withal diſſwaded him from it; inſomuch that his Nephew ſaid to him, Beware that you do not go againſt Hoſein, and rebel againſt your Lord, and cut off Mercy from you; By God, you had better be deprived of the Dominion of the whole World, than meet your Lord with the Blood of Hoſein upon you. He ſeemed to acquieſce and be overruled, but upon Obeidollah's renewing his Threats, he marched againſt him, and met him in the Place above-mentioned, and ſent to enquire of him what brought him thither. Hoſein anſwered, that the Cufians had wrote to him, but ſince they had rejected him he was willing to return to Meccah. Amer was glad to hear it, and ſaid, he hoped in God he ſhould be excuſed from fighting againſt him. Then Amer wrote concerning it to Obeidollah, who ſent him this Anſwer, "Get between him and the Water, as "he did by Othman the innocent and righteous, "the injured Emperor of the Faithful, and pro- "poſe to him and his Companions to acknow- "ledge their Submiſſion to the Government of

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

"the Emperor of the Faithful, Yezid; when "they have done that we shall consider of fur- "ther Measures." From that Time Amer's Men began to hinder Hosein's from getting any Water, The Name of the Place where they intercepted him was called Kerbela. As soon as Hosein heard it, he said, Kerb and bala, that is, Trouble and Affliction. At last Hosein proposed a Conference with Amer between the two Armies; they came each of them attended by twenty Horse, who kept their due Distance whilst they discoursed. The Contents of their Conference were, (according to Abulpeda and some others) that Hosein proposed that he might be admitted to one of these three Conditions; Either that he might go to Yezid, or else have Leave to return back to Arabia, or else be placed in some Garrison where he might fight against the Turks. Amer wrote Word of this to Obeidollah, who seemed at first to look upon it as a reasonable Proposal; till Shamer stood up and swore, that he ought to be admitted to no Terms till he had surrendered himself, adding, that he had been informed of a long Conference between him and Amer. This changed Obeidollah's Mind quite. There is a Tradition from one that attended Hosein all the Way from Meccah, and overheard this Conference, which says, that Hosein did not ask of him either to be sent to Yezid, or to be put

put into any of the Garrisons, but only either that he might have Leave to return to the Place from whence he came or else have his Liberty to go where he would about the Country, till he should see which way the Inclinations of the People would turn. YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

Obeidollah, who was resolved not to venture Hosein too near Cufah for fear of an Insurrection, sent Shamer to Amer with Orders, that if Hosein and his Men would surrender themselves, they should be received; if not, that he should first propose to Amer to fall upon them and kill them, and trample them under their Horse's Feet; and upon his Refusal to strike his Head off, and command the Forces himself. Obeidollah gave a Letter of Protection and Security to four of Ali's Sons, Abbàs (whom he had by Obeidollah's Aunt) Abdollah, Jaafar and Othman, which they refused to accept, saying, That the Security of God was better than that of the Son of [7] Somyah. Obeidollah had sent a chiding Letter to Amer because of his Remissness, which made him undertake to fight against Hosein himself when Shamer proposed it to him, without knowing that his Refusal was to cost him his Head. Amer drew up his Forces in the Evening, on the ninth of the Month Moharram, and came up to Hasan's Tent, who was sitting in his Door just after Evening Prayer. He and his Brother Abbàs desired of them to give him Time till the next Morning, and he would answer them to any thing they desired of him. This was granted, and one of Amer's Men said that if a Deilamite (a Nation which they mortally hated) had asked such a small Request, it ought not to have been refused. At their first advancing he was leaning upon his Sword and nodding. His Sister came and waked him, and as he lifted up his Head, he said, I saw the Prophet in my Dream, who said Thou shalt rest with us. Then she struck her Face, and said, Woe be to us; he answered, Sister you have no reason to complain: God have Mercy upon you, hold your peace. In the Night she came sighing to him again, and said, Alas for the Desolation of my Family! I wish I had died Yesterday, rather than have lived till to Day; my Mother Phatemah is dead, and my Father Ali, and my Brother Hasan! Alas for the Destruction that is past, and the Dregs of it that remain behind. Hosein looked upon her and said, Sister, do not let the Devil take away your Temper. Then beating her Face, and tearing open her Bosom, she fell down in a Swoon. Hosein having recovered her with a little cold Water said, "Sister put your

[7] Though Obeidollah was not the Son of Somyah, but her Grandson; and it is frequently so used in the Old Testament.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

"Trust

" Truſt in God, and depend upon the Comfort " that comes from him; and know that the " People of the Earth ſhall die, and the People " of the Heaven ſhall not remain; and every " thing ſhall periſh, but the preſence of God " who created all Things by his Power, and " ſhall make them return, and they ſhall return " to him alone. My Father was better than I, " and my Mother was better than I, and my " Brother was better than I; and I, and they, " and every Muſleman has an Example in the " Apoſtle of God." Then charging her not to uſe any ſuch Behaviour after his Death, he took her by the Hand, and led her into her Tent. He told his Friends, that theſe Men wanted no body but him, and deſired them to ſhift for themſelves, and get away if poſſible to their reſpective Habitations; but Alabbas told him, they would not, and ſaid, God forbid we ſhould ever ſee the time wherein we ſhould ſurvive you. Then he commanded his Men to cord the Tents cloſe together, and put the Ropes through one another, that the Enemy might not get between them. They made a Lane of their Tents, and Hoſein in the Night ordered a Trench to be digged at one End of it, into which they threw a good quantity of Wood and Cane, which they ſet on Fire, to prevent their being ſurrounded; ſo that they could be attacked only in the Front.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

They ſpent all that Night in hearty Prayer and Supplication, whilſt all the while the Horſe of the Enemies Guard were riding round about them. The next Morning both ſides prepared themſelves for Battel; and Hoſein put his ſmall Forces, which amounted to no more than Two and thirty Horſe, and Forty Foot, into good Order. Amer having drawn up his Men, and delivered the Flag to one of his Servants, came very near. In the mean time Hoſein went into a Tent, and having firſt waſhed and anointed, he perfumed himſelf with the larger ſort of Muſk: Several of the great Men did the like: One of them aſking what was the meaning of it, another anſwered, Alas! there is nothing between us and the black-eyed Girls, but only that theſe People come down upon us, and kill us. Then Hoſein mounted his Horſe, and took the Alcoran and laid it before him, and coming up to the People invited them to the Performance of their Duty; adding, O God thou art my Confidence in every Trouble, and my Hope in all Adverſity! He ſet his Son Ali on Horſe-back, the eldeſt of that Name, for there were two of them, but he was very ſick. Then he cryed out, hearken to the Advice that I am going to give you; at which they all gave Attention with profound Silence. Then having firſt praiſed God, he ſaid, "O Men! if you will hearken to me

"and

" and do me Juſtice, it will be better for you, " and you will find no Handle of doing any " thing againſt me: But if you will not hearken " to me, [2] bring all that are concerned with you " together that your Matter be clear, and then " make Report of it to me without Delay: [3] My " Protector is God, who ſent down the Book, (i. e. " the Alcoran) and he will be the Protector of the " Righteous.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

As ſoon as he uttered theſe laſt Words, his Siſters and Daughters lift up their Voices in Weeping; at which Hoſein ſaid, God reward the Son of Abbàs; meaning, becauſe he had adviſed him to leave the Women behind him. Then he ſent his Brother Alabbàs and his Son Ali to keep them quiet. He next reminded them of his Excellency, the Nobility of his Birth, the Greatneſs of his Power, and his High Deſcent, and ſaid, " Conſider with your ſelves " whether or no ſuch a Man as I am is not " better for you: I who am the Son of your " Prophet's Daughter, beſides whom there is " no other upon the Face of the Earth: Ali " was my Father; Jaafar and Hamzah, the " chief of the Martyrs, were both my Uncles; " and the Apoſtle of God, upon whom be Peace, " ſaid both of me and my Brother, that we were " the chief of the Youth of Paradiſe! If you will

[2] Alcoran, C. x. V. 72. [3] vi. 194.

" believe

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

" believe me what I ſay is true, for by God, I " never told a Lye in Earneſt ſince I had my " Underſtanding, for God hates a Lye. If you " do not believe me, aſk the Companions of " the Apoſtle of God [here he named them] and " they will tell you the ſame. Let me go back " to what I have". They aſked what hindered him from being ruled by the reſt of his Relations. He anſwered, God forbid that I ſhould ſet my Hand to the Reſignation of my Right after a ſlaviſh mauner. I have recourſe to God from every Tyrant that doth not believe in the Day of Account.

[6] Juſt upon this a Party of about thirty Horſe wheeled about, and came up to Hoſein, who expected nothing leſs than to be attacked by them. Harro that had met with Hoſein firſt was at the head of them. He came to teſtify his Repentance, and proffer his Service to Hoſein, declaring that if he had once thought it would ever have come to that Extremity, he would never have intercepted him, but have gone with him directly to Yezid; and to make the beſt amends for his Miſtake, that his preſent Circumſtances would admit of, was reſolved to die with him. Hoſein accepted his Repentance. And Harro ſtood forth and called to the People (to Amer in particular) " Alas for you! Will you not accept

[6] MS. Laud. Num. 161. A. MS. Hunt. Num. 495.

" thoſe

" thoſe three Articles, which the Son of the " Apoſtle's Daughter offers you?" Amer told him, that if it lay in his Power he would, but Obeidollah was againſt it, and had been chiding and reproaching the Cufians, for expreſſing the leaſt Inclination to hearken to them. Then ſaid Harro, " Alas for you! You invited him till he " came, and then deceived him; and this did " not ſatisfy you, but you are come out to fight " againſt him! Nay you have hindered him, " and his Wives, and his Family, from the Wa- " ter of Euphrates, where Jews, and Chriſtians " and Sabians drink, and Hogs and Dogs ſport " themſelves, and he is like a Priſoner in your " Hands, uncapable of doing himſelf either " good or hurt." Then Amer ſaid to the Slave, to whom he had given the Flag, Bring up the Colours. As ſoon as they came up to the front of the Troops, Shamer ſhot an Arrow, and ſaid, Bear Witneſs that I ſhot the firſt Arrow. The Battel thus begun, they exchanged Arrows a-pace on both ſides. Two of Amer's Men went out, and offered themſelves to ſingle Combat, their Names were Yaſer and Salem; Abdollah the Son of Amer, having firſt aſked leave of Hoſein, anſwered them, and killed Yaſer firſt, and Salem next, though Salem had firſt cut off all the Fingers of his left Hand. The next that offered himſelf, came up cloſe to Hoſein, and ſaid

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

said to him, Hoſein you are juſt at Hell. To whom Hoſein replied; By no means, alas for thee, I go to a merciful Lord, full of Forgiveneſs, eaſy to be obeyed, but you are more worthy of Hell. As he turned about, his Horſe ran away with him, and he fell off: His left Foot hung in the Stirrop, and as he paſſed by one of Hoſein's Men lopped off his right Leg. His Horſe continuing his Speed, his Head was all the way daſhed againſt the Stones, till he died. There were ſeveral ſingle Combats fought, in all which Hoſein's Men were ſuperior, becauſe they fought like Men that were reſolved to die. This made ſome of the leading Men adviſe Amer not to expoſe his Men any longer to the hazard of ſingle Combats. Then Amrou the Son of Hejage, who commanded the right Wing, gave an Onſet with theſe Words in his Mouth, Fight againſt thoſe who ſeparate from the Religion, and from the Imàm [Yezid] and from the Congregation. Alas! ſaid Hoſein, what do you encourage your Men againſt us, are we the Men that ſeparate from the Religion, and you thoſe that keep to it? When your Souls are ſeparated from your Bodies, you will know which of us deſerve Hell Fire moſt. In this Attack Muſlim the Son of Auſájah was killed, he was the firſt that died on Hoſein's ſide, and Hoſein went and commiſerated him at his laſt Gaſp. Hobeib ſaid to him, having firſt told him that that he was near Paradiſe, If I was not ſure that I ſhould ſoon follow you, I would fulfil your Will whatſoever it was: To whom Muſlim anſwered in a very low Voice, this is my Will (pointing to Hoſein) that you die for him. YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

Then Shamer gave an Onſet with the Left Wing with ſuch Violence, that they came very near to Hoſein, but Hoſein's Horſe repulſed them bravely; ſo that they ſent to Amer for ſome Archers, who ordered them above Five Hundred. As ſoon as they came up, they let fly their Arrows ſo thick amongſt Hoſein's Horſe, that they were all immediately reduced to Foot. Harro perceiving his Horſe wounded, leaped off from him with his Sword in his Hand, as eager as a Lion.

Amer perceiving that they were inacceſſible every where, but in the Front, commanded his Men to pull down the Tents; but that not ſucceeding, for Hoſein's Men killed thoſe that went about it, Shamer, God confound him, called for Fire to burn Hoſein's Tent (having firſt ſtruck his Javelin into it) with all that were in it. The Women ſhrieked and ran out of it. How, ſaid Hoſein, what wouldſt thou burn my Family? God burn thee in Hell-Fire. One of the great Men came to Shamer, and repreſented to him how ſcandalous, and how unbecoming a Soldier it was to ſcare the Women: He began to be aſham-aſhamed of it, and was thinking of retreating, when ſome of Hoſein's Men attacked him, and drove him off the Ground with the loſs of ſome of his Men. It was now Noon, and Hoſein bad ſome of his Friends ſpeak to them to forbear, till he had ſaid the Prayers proper for that time of Day. One of the Cufians ſaid, They will not be heard; Habib anſwered, Alas for you, ſhall your Prayers be heard, and not the Prayers of the Apoſtle's Family, upon whom be Peace! Habib fought with great Courage till he was killed. Then Hoſein ſaid the Noon Prayers amongſt the poor Remainder of his ſhattered Company, and to the reſt of the Office he added the Prayer of Fear, never uſed but in Caſes of Extremity. During the time of the Fight he ſaid ſeveral Prayers, in one of which there is this pathetical Expreſſion, Let not the Dews of Heaven diſtil upon them, and with-hold thou from them the Bleſſings of the Earth, for they firſt invited me and then deceived me. After the Prayers were over the Fight was renewed with great Vehemency on both Sides, till they came up cloſe to Hoſein, but his Friends protected him: One of them killed ten beſides thoſe he wounded; at laſt he was taken, both his Arms being broken, and Shamer ſtruck off his Head. Hoſein's Party were now almoſt all cut off, and his eldeſt Son Ali was firſt wounded with a Lance, and afterwards wards cut in Pieces. The reſt were moſt of them ſingled out by the Archers and ſhot. Hoſein ſtaid a long time and no body came to him, but he turned back again, for hardly any of them could find in his Heart to kill him. At laſt one came and ſtruck him with a Sword upon the Head and wounded him, ſo that his Head-Piece was full of Blood, which he took off and flung away, ſaying, that he had neither eat nor drank out of it, and bound up his Head in his Turbant. Quite tired out, he ſat down at the Door of his Tent, and took his little Son Abdollah upon his Lap, who was preſently killed with an Arrow. Hoſein took his Hand full of the Child's Blood, and throwing it towards Heaven, ſaid, O Lord! If thou with-holdeſt help from us from Heaven, give it to thoſe that are better, and take Vengeance upon the wicked. At laſt he grew extremely thirſty, and whilſt he was drinking, he was ſhot in the Mouth with an Arrow. He then lift up his Hands to Heaven, which were both full of Blood, and prayed very earneſtly. Then Shamer encouraged ſome of the ſtouteſt of his Men to ſurround him: At the ſame time a little Nephew of his, a beautiful Child, with Jewels in his Ears, came to embrace him, and had his Hand cut off with a Sword: To whom Hoſein ſaid, Thy Reward, Child, is with God, thou ſhalt go to thy pious Forefathers. Then they ſur-surrounded him, and he threw himself into the middle of them, charging sometimes on the Right, and sometimes on the Left, and which way soever he turned himself, they flew off as so many Deer from before a Lyon. His Sister Zeinab, the Daughter of Phatemah, came out and said, I wish the Heaven would fall upon the Earth; then turning to Amer, she asked him if he could stand by and see Hosein killed: Whereupon the Tears trickled down his Beard, and he turned his Face away from her. No body offered to meddle with him, till Shamer set them on again, with Reproaches and Curses, one of them, for fear of Shamer, threw a Lance at him, but made it fall short, because he would not hurt him. At last one wounded him upon the Hand, a second upon the Neck, whilst a third thrust him thorough with a Spear. When he was dead, they cut his Head off. When he was searched there were found upon him Three and thirty Wounds, and Four and thirty Bruises. Shamer intended to have killed Ali the youngest Son of Hosein, that was afterwards called Zein Alabedin, i.e. The Ornament of the Religious, who was very Young and very sick, but one of his Companions diswaded him from it. They took Hosein's Spear, and the rest of the Spoil, and divided all his Riches, and his Furniture, even so far as to take away the Womens richest Cloaths:

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

Cloaths: And though Amer forbad their going near the Women, and had given expreſs Command, that whoſoever had taken any thing from them, ſhould return it again; yet they were never the better, for there was nothing reſtored that they had loſt. [1] Hoſein's Seventy two Men were killed (Seventeen of which were deſcended from Phatemah) and on the other ſide, there were Eighty eight killed, beſides the Wounded. Then they rode their Horſes over Hoſein's Body backwards and forwards ſo often, that they trampled it into the very Ground. Haula, who had his Head, went away Poſt with it to Obeidollah; but finding the Caſtle ſhut, he carried it home to his own Houſe, and told his Wife, that he had brought her the Rarity of the World. The Woman was in a Rage, and ſaid, Other Men make Preſents of Gold and Silver, and you have brought the Head of the Son of the Apoſtle's Daughter: By God, the ſame Bed ſhall never hold us two any more; and immediately leaped out of Bed from him and ran away. He procured another of his Countrywomen to ſupply her Place, who reported afterwards that ſhe was not able to ſleep all that Night, becauſe of a Light which ſhe ſaw ſtreaming up towards Heaven from the Place where Hoſein's Head lay, and white Birds continually hovering about

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

[1] MS. Laud. Num. 161. A. MS. Hunt. Num. 495.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

it. Haula the next Morning carried the Head to Obeidollah, who treated it reproachfully, and ſtruck it over the Mouth with a Stick; upon which Zeid the Son of Arkom ſaid to him, Take away this Stick, for I ſwear by him, beſides whom there is no other God, I have ſeen the Lips of the Apoſtle of God (upon whom be Peace) upon theſe Lips. Obeidollah angrily told him, that if he was not an old Man, and out of his Wits, he would ſtrike his Head off.

Zeinab, Ali's Siſter, put on her worſt Cloaths, and, attended by ſome of her Maids, went and ſat down in the Caſtle. Obeidollah aſked thrice who ſhe was, before any one told him: As ſoon as he knew her, he ſaid, Praiſe be to God, who hath brought you to Shame, and hath killed you, and proved your Stories to be Lyes: She anſwered, Praiſe be to God, who hath honoured us with Mahomet (upon whom be God's Peace) and hath purified us, and not [dealt with us] as you ſay, for [none but] the Wicked is brought to ſhame, and the lye is given [to none but] to the Evil one. He replied, Do not you ſee, how God hath dealt with your Family? She anſwered, Death was decreed for them, and they are gone to their reſting Place; God ſhall bring both you and them together, to plead your ſeveral Cauſes before him. This put him into a Rage, but one of his Friends bad him remem-member that she was a Woman, and not take any thing amiss that she said. Obeidollah told her, that God had given his Soul full Satisfaction over their Chief [Hosein] and their whole rebellious Family. Zeinab answered, you have destroyed all my Men, and my Family, and cut off my Branch, and tore up my Root: If that be Satisfaction to your Soul, you have it. He swore she was a Woman of Courage, adding that her Father was a Poet, and a Man of Courage. She answered, that Courage was no Ingredient in a Woman's Character, but she knew how to speak. Then looking upon Ali, Hosein's Son, he commanded him to be searched, for he said, he believed he was arrived at Man's Estate: Being informed that he was, he commanded him to be Beheaded. Here Zeinab all in Tears embraced her Nephew, and asked Obeidollah, if he had not yet drunk deep enough of the Blood of their Family; and intreated him, if he was resolved to kill the Lad, to give her leave to die along with him. Young Ali begged of him, for the sake of the near Relation that there was between him and the Women, that he would not send them away without so much as one Man to attend them in their Journey. Obeidollah pausing a while, and looking sometimes upon her, and sometimes upon the People, was astonished at her Tenderness, and swore he believed ſhe was in good Earneſt, and had rather die with him, than ſurvive him. At laſt he diſmiſſed him, and bad him go along with the Women; which they looked upon as a very providential Deliverance, and ſaid that Obeidollah would have killed Ali, but God diverted him from it.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cæpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cæpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

Obeidollah went from the Caſtle to the great Moſque, and going up into the Pulpit, ſaid, Praiſe be to God, who hath manifeſtly ſhewn the Truth, and thoſe that are in the Poſſeſſion of it; and hath aſſiſted Yezid the Governour of the Faithful, and his Party; and killed the Lyar, the Son of the Lyar Hoſein, the Son of Ali and his Party. This provoked Ali's Party to the laſt Degree; ſeveral of them roſe up in great Indignation, and among the reſt, there was one who was Blind of both his Eyes, which he had loſt in two ſeveral Battles, and uſed to continue in the Moſque, praying from Morning to Night. He hearing Ziyàd's Speech, he cried out. O Son of Merjánah! (that was his Mother's Name) the Lyar, the Son of the Lyar, are you and your Father, and he that [7] gave you your Commiſſion, and his Father. O Son of Merjanah! you kill the Sons of the Prophets, and ſpeak the Words of honeſt Men. Every Man, even of his own Party, blamed him for his Raſhneſs, fearing that he had not

[7] That is Yezid and Moawiyah.

not only brought Destruction upon himself, but upon them too. He was seized by Obeidollah's Order, but upon his crying out he was rescued by his Party, there being about Seven Hundred of them at that Time in Town; but notwithstanding his Escape for the present, he was killed soon after, and hung upon a Gibbet on the Heath for an Example. YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

Hosein's Head was first set up in Cufah, afterwards carried about the Streets, and then sent to Yezid at Damascus, along with the Women and young Ali. When Obeidollah's Express came to Yezid, and wished him Joy of his Success, and the Death of Hosein, Yezid wept and said, I should have been very well pleased without the Death of Hosein: God curse the Son of Somyah; if I had had him in my Power, I would have forgiven him: God loved Hosein, but did not suffer him to attain to any thing. Ali travelled with a Chain about his Neck; Shamer and Mehphar conducted them with a Body of Men, but Ali would not vouchsafe to speak one Word to them all the Way. 'Tis said, that whilst they were upon the Road, Yezid advised with his Courtiers how he should dispose of them: One of them said, Never bring up the Whelp of a Cur; kill Ali the Son of Hosein, and extinguish the whole Generation of them: At which Yezid held his Peace. Another of a milder Temper said, O Emperor of the Faithful do with them as the Apostle of God would do if he were to see them in this their Condition. This moved him to Compassion. When he saw Hosein's Head he said, O Hosein, if I had had thee in my Power I would not have killed thee! Then sitting down he called in the chief of the Syrian Nobility, and ordered Hosein's Wives and Children to be brought before him; but he was very angry when he saw the Women appear in such a mean Condition, and said, God curse the Son of Somyah, surely if he had ever been related to these Women he could never have treated them after this scandalous manner. Then turning to Ali, he said, This was your Father, who set at nought my Right, and jostled me out of my Government, and God hath disposed of him as you see. Whom Ali briskly answered with this Verse in the Alcoran, [5] There is no Calamity befalls you, either in the Earth, or in your own selves, but it was in a Book before we created it. Yezid, turning to his Son Caled, bad him answer him; but Caled was Young and Ignorant and had nothing to say. Then said Yezid, [6] What Calamity hath befallen you, is what your own Hands have drawn upon you, and he pardoneth a great many. One of the Syrians would have begged Phatemah, Ali's Daughter; she was but a little Girl, and could not

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30 A. C. 680.

[5] Alcoran. c. lvii. 22. [6] Alcoran. c. xlii. 29.

not tell but it might be so, and in a great Fright laid hold upon her Sister Zeinab's Cloaths, who who knew very well that it was contrary to the Law, to force any one out of their own Sect, and said [4] He lies: By God, though I die, it neither is in your Power nor his. At which Yezid was angry, and told her, that it was in his Power, and he would do it if he pleased. She told him it was not in his Power to force them out of their own Religion; at which he started up in a Passion and said, Is this the Language that you come before me withal? it was your Father and your Brother that went out from the Religion: Then said she, you, and your Father and Grandfather were all in the Right! This provoked him to say, Thou lyest, thou Enemy of God. How, said Zeinab, you the Governour of the Faithful, and reproach us unjustly, and make an ill use of your Power! At which he blushed and held his peace. The Syrian petitioning again for Phatemah, Yezid cursed him, and bad him be quiet. He then ordered them to be conducted to the hot Bath, and sent them Cloaths and all Provisions necessary for their Refreshment after the Fatigue of their tedious Journey. He entertained the Women with all possible Respect in his Palace; and Moawiyah's Wives came, and kept them Company the space of three Days, mourning for Hosein. So long as they staid, he never walked abroad but he took Ali and Amrou, Hosein's two Sons, along with him! Once he asked Amrou, who was very little, whether he would fight with his Son Caled; Amrou immediately answered, Give me a Knife, and give him one. An Enemy to the Family of Ali, a Court Flatterer, said upon this, Depend upon it always, that one Serpent is the Parent of another.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cæpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

[4] She used that word, to express her Contempt of him; and gave him the Lye for demanding what was impracticable.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cæpit Sept. 30. A. C. 679.

After they had taken a competent Time for their Refreshment, and were resolved upon their Journey to Medinah, Yezid sent for his Wives and Children to take their leaves, and commanded Nòoman, the Son of Bashir, to accommodate them with all necessary Provisions, and send them Home with a safe Convoy. When he dismissed them he said to Ali, "God curse the Son "of Marjànah; if your Father had fallen into "my Hands, I would have granted him any "Condition he would have desired, and done "whatsoever lay in my Power to have saved "him from Death, though it had been with the "loss of some of my own Children. But God "hath decreed what you see: Write to me: "Whatsoever you desire shall be done for "you."

The

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

The Perſon to whoſe Care Yezid had committed them, behaved himſelf ſo civily and reſpectfully to them all the Way, (for they travelled in the Night as well as in the Day, and he was very vigilant over them) that Phatemah ſaid to her Siſter Zeinab; Siſter, this Syrian hath behaved himſelf ſo kindly to us, do not you think we ought to make him a Preſent? Alas! ſaid Zeinab, we have nothing to preſent him withal but our Jewels: Then, ſaid the Girl, let us give him them: She conſented, and they took off their Bracelets and ſent them to him with an Apology, begging of him to accept of them as a Token of their Reſpect for his Courteſy: He modeſtly refuſed them with this generous Anſwer, "If what I have done had been only with "regard to this World, a leſs Price than your "Jewels had been a ſufficient Reward; but what "I did was for God's Sake, and upon the account "of your Relation to the Prophet, God's Peace be "upon him." When they came to Medinah there was ſuch Lamentation made between them and and the reſt of the Family of Haſhem, as is not to be expreſſed.

4 There are different Reports concerning Hoſein's Head: Some ſay it was ſent to Medinah, and buried by his Mother; others, that it was buried at Damaſcus, in a Place called the Garden-Gate, from whence it was removed to Aſcalon; and afterwards by the Chaliphs of Ægypt, to Grand Cairo, where they interred it and erected a Monument over it, which they called the [5] Sepulchre of Hoſein the Martyr. [6] Theſe Ægyptian Chaliphs, who called themſelves Phatemites, and had Poſſeſſion of Ægypt from before the Year Four Hundred, till after the Year Six Hundred and Sixty, pretend that Hoſein's Head came into Ægypt after the Five Hundredth Year of the Hegirah; but the Imàms of the Learned ſay, That there is no Foundation for that Story of theirs, but that they only intended by it to make their Pretence to the Nobility of their Extraction paſs more current, ſince they called themſelves Phatemites, as being deſcended from Mahomet's Daughter Phatemah.

[4] Abulpheda.

den-

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

[7] Some pretend to ſhew his Burying Place near the River of Kerbela; others ſay that there are no Footſteps of it remaining. [8] The firſt Sultan of the Race of the Bovides built a ſumptuous Monument there, which is viſited to this very Day with great Devotion by the Perſians: This Sultan called his Edifice by the Name of Kunbud Faïz, which ſignifies in the Perſian Language, the Magnificent Dome; but they now

[5] Méſhed Hoſein. [6] MS. Hunt. Num. 495. [7] Adhadedoulat. [8] D'Herbelot in Motawakkel.

com-

commonly call it in Arabick Meſhed Hoſein, The Sepulchre of Hoſein the Martyr. YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cæpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

The Chaliph Almotawakkel, who began to reign in the Year Two Hundred and Thirty Two, perſecuted the Memory of Ali and his Family to that Degree, that he cauſed Hoſein's Sepulchre (called by the Perſians, The Holy, Sublime and Pure Place) to be quite razed and deſtroyed, and to obliterate entirely the leaſt Remainder of it, was reſolved to draw a Canal of Water over it; however he was fruſtrated in his Attempt, for the Water would never come near the Tomb, but kept its Diſtance out of Reſpect; from whence that Water was called Haïr, which ſignifies aſtoniſhed and reſpectful, a Name which hath ſince paſſed to the Sepulchre it ſelf, upon the Account of ſuch a Miracle. [2] But there is one Naïm, who uſed to be angry with any one that pretended to know the Place of his Burial.

[3] The two Titles which they generally give Hoſein in Perſia are, that of Shahîd, the Martyr, or that of Séyyid, the Lord; and by the Word Alſeidáni, which ſignifies the two Lords, without adding any thing more, they always underſtand the two eldeſt Sons of Ali, who were Haſan and Hoſein.

They report, that amongſt other Acts of Piety which Hoſein practiſed, he uſed every twenty

[2] MS. Hunt. Numb. 495. [3] D'Herbelot.

four

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. capit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

four Hours to make a Thouſand Adorations or Proſtrations before God; and that at the Age of five and fifty Years he had gone five and twenty Pilgrimages on Foot; whereas a good Muſleman is not obliged to go above once in his whole Life.

Yezdi, in a Treatiſe concerning [1] the Divine Love, relates, that Hoſein having one Day aſked his Father Ali if he loved him, and Ali having anſwered, that he loved him tenderly; Hoſein aſked him once more if he loved God, and Ali having alſo anſwered that Queſtion affirmatively, Hoſein ſaid to him, Two Loves can never meet in the ſame Heart, neither hath God given a Man two Hearts. At theſe Words Ali's Heart was moved, and they ſay he wept.

Hoſein touched with his Father's Tears, reſumed the Diſcourſe, and ſaid to him, to comfort him; If you had your Choice between the Sin of Infidelity towards God, or my Death, what would you do? Ali anſwered, I would ſooner deliver you up to Death than abandon my Faith: Then you may know by this Mark, replied Hoſein, that the Love you have for me is only a natural Tenderneſs, and that which you bear towards God is a true Love.

[1] The Title is Reſálat phi biyáni'l mehabbat.

He

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit. Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

He was killed on the [2] tenth Day of the Month Moharram, in the Year of the Hegirah 61. This Date is so celebrated amongst the Persians, that to this very Day they call it the Day of Hosein, Yaum Hosein, Rûz Hosein. The Memory of, and mourning for this Death, are still annually celebrated among them; and it is this Anniversary Weeping and extravagant Lamentation that still keeps up the Aversion of this Nation to all the Muslemans that are not in the same Sentiments with themselves; so that it causes for that Time an implacable Hatred between the Successors of the Family of Omiyah and Abbàs, and all those that do not look upon Abubeker, Omar and Othman to have been Usurpers, and Ali the only Rightful and Lawful Successor of Mahomet.

[3] My Anonymous Author is very severe upon the Sect of Ali, both upon the Account of the many Fables they have invented concerning Hosein, and their superstitious Observation of the Day of his Death. Let us hear him in his own Words, "The Sect of Ali, says he, have forged "a Multitude of abominable Lyes upon this "Occasion; they say that the Sun was eclipsed "upon this Day, so that the Stars appeared at [2] October 19. A. C. 680. Though the English Reader must not suppose that they keep the ninth of our October, but the tenth of Moharram, according as it falls, because theirs is the Lunar Year. [3] MS. Hunt. Num. 495.

"Noon

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

" Noon Day; that you could not take up a " Stone but there was Blood under it; that the " Sides of the Heavens were turned red, and " when the Sun aroſe the Beams of it looked " like Blood; that the Heavens looked like clot- " ted Blood; that the Stars ſtrook one againſt " the other; that the Heavens rained red Blood, " and that before this Day there was no Redneſs " in the Heavens; that when Hoſein's Head was " brought into the Palace, the Walls dropt with " Blood; that the Earth was darkned for the " Space of three Days; that no body could " touch any Saffron or [1] Juniper all that Day " but it burnt his Fingers: that there was ne- " ver a Stone taken up in Jeruſalem but there " was clotted Blood under it; and that when " one of Hoſein's Camels that was killed was " boiled, the Fleſh of it was as bitter as Colo- " quintida; beſides innumerable other Lyes " without any manner of Foundation: But this " is true, that they that had a Hand in his " Death dwindled away and came to nothing; " but ſoon fell ſick, and moſt of them died mad. " In the Time of the Government of the Fa- " mily of the Bowides, they uſed to keep this " Day as a Solemn Faſt, and throw Duſt and " Aſhes about the Streets of Bagdad, and cloath " themſelves with black Sack-cloth, and expreſs

[1] Arab Wars.

" the

" the higheſt Degree of Sorrow and Lamenta- YEZID I.
" tion: A great many of them would drink no An. Heg. 61.
" Water, in Conformity to Hoſein, who was cœpit Sept. 30.
" killed when he was thirſty; all which are A. C. 680.
" abominable Inventions and vile Practices con" trived on purpoſe to caſt an Aſperſion upon
" the Government of the Houſe of Ommiyah, " becauſe he was killed in their Time. Now
" they that killed him, urge againſt him, that " he came to depoſe a Perſon that was ſet over " them by the Conſent of the People, and to " make a Diviſion amongſt them, which was " firſt begun by Muſlim; but ſome of the Doc" tors caution againſt this with the utmoſt In" dignation, as a pernicious and dangerous way
" of arguing: They determine thus; If a cer" tain Number did interpret [the Law] againſt " him and kill him, they had nothing to do to " kill him, but it was their Duty to have ac" corded to him one of his three Propoſals;
" [4] and if a Party of inſolent Fellows find fault
" with a whole People and riſe againſt its Pro" phet (upon whom be God's Peace) the Mat" ter is not to be [determined] according to their " Practice and Example, but according to the " Majority of the Nation both Ancient and " Modern: Thoſe that were concerned in Ho- " ſein's Death, were only a ſmall Handful of [4] MS. Hunt. Numb. 495.

" Cu-

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cæpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

" Cufians, (God confound them) and the greateſt " Part of them had written to him, and brought " him into their pernicious Counſels and De- " ſigns; neither did all that Army [that went " againſt him] approve of that which fell out, " nor did Yezid the Son of Moawiyah, the Go- " vernour of the Faithful, at that Time approve " of his Death, (though God knows) nor had " any Averſion to him: What appears moſt " probable is, that if he had had him in his " Power before he was killed, he would have " ſpared his Life according to his Father's Di- " rection, as he ſaid he would himſelf.

" Now every Muſleman ought to be concern- " ed at this Accident of his Death, (God ac- " cept him) for he was one of the Lords of the " Muſlemans, and one of the learned Men of " the Society, and the Daughter's Son of the " Apoſtle of God, who was the moſt excellent " of his Daughters, and he was devout, coura- " gious and munificent; yet notwithſtanding all " this, what theſe People do in making an out- " ward Show of Sorrow, which perhaps is the " Caſe of moſt of them, is not at all becoming. " His Father was a better Man than him, yet " they do not keep the Day upon which he was " murdered, as they do that of Hoſein; and Ali " was killed as he went out to Morning Prayer, " on the ſeventeenth of the Month Ramadan in

" the

" the fortieth Year: And Othman the Son of Affàn was a better Man than Ali, according " to thoſe that follow the Tradition and the [2] " Church; and he was killed after he had been " beſieged in his own Houſe, in the hot Days " of the Month Du'lhagiah, in the thirty ſixth " Year; and he was cut from one jugular Vein " to the other, and yet the People never kept " his Day: And ſo in like manner Omar the " Son of Alchitáb was a better Man than Oth- " man, he was killed as he was ſaying the Pray- " ers in the Imám's Deſk and was reading the " Alcoran, and his Day was never kept; and " Abubecr was a better Man than he, but the " Day of his Death was never obſerved: And " the Apoſtle of God, upon whom be Peace, " who is abſolute Lord of all the Sons of Men, " both in this World and that which is to come; " God took him to himſelf even as the Prophets " before him died; yet the Muſlemans never " made ſuch a Stir about the Obſervation of " the Day of his Death as a ſolemn Day, as " theſe Fools do about the Day in which Hoſein

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

[2] What the Jews call עדה Edah, the Greeks ἐκκλησία, and we in Engliſh Church, the Arabians call jemáah, and mean the very ſame thing by it, viz. The Congregation of the Faithful united under their lawful Imàm, or, Head: And they denominate as we do, thoſe that ſeparate from them, according to their particular Tenets or Opinions.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

" was killed." Thus far my Author in his own Words.

[9] This same Year Yezid made Salem, the Son of Ziyàd, Lieutenant of Sejestan and Chorasàn, when he came Ambassador to him; he was then Twenty Four Years of Age; as soon as he came to his Charge he gathered together a select Number of Forces, and the best Horses that could be found, in order to make an Invasion upon the Turks. He carried his Wife along with him, (the first Arabian Woman that ever passed over that River) who was brought to Bed of a Son in that part of the Country which is called the Sogd of Samarcand, being the neighbouring Plains and Villages that lye round about that City, from whence he was afterwards Sirnamed Sogdi, that is the Sogdian: When she lay in she sent to the Duke of Sogd's Lady to borrow her Jewels; she sent her her Golden Crown that was full of them, which she had not the good Manners to restore again, but carried it along with her upon the Return of the Arabians. Salem sent Mohalleb to Chowarezm, the chief City of the Turks, who were willing to purchase Peace at any Rate; he assessed them and their Cattle at so much a Head, that the Sum arose to fifty Millions: Salem having taken out of it what he thought fit, sent the rest to Yezid. He then marched

[9] MS. Laud. Num. 161. A.

for-

forwards towards Samarcand, the Inhabitants whereof made their Peace with a vaſt Sum of Money. This ſame Year, in the beginning of the Month Du'lhagiah, Yezid made Waled the Son of Otbah Governour of Medinah, who headed the People on Pilgrimage to Meccah both this and the following Year. Baſorah and Cufah were ſtill in the Hands of Obeidollah. YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

Hoſein being removed, Abdollah the Son of Zobeir, who had never ſubmitted to Yezid's Government, began now to declare publickly againſt him, and depoſed him at Medinah. The Inhabitants of Meccah and Medinah, perceiving that Yezid did all that lay in his power to ſuppreſs the Houſe of Ali, rebelled againſt him, and proclaimed Abdollah for their Caliph. As ſoon as he had taken their Suffrages, to ſtrengthen his Intereſt by Popularity, he made long Speeches to the People, wherein he aggravated all the Circumſtances of Hoſein's Death to the laſt degree, and repreſented the Irakians in general, and the Cufians in particular, as the moſt perfidious Villains upon the face of the Earth: How they had invited him firſt, and baſely betrayed him afterwards: What a ſcandalous Propoſal they had offered a Perſon of his Dignity, either of ſurrendering himſelf into the Hands of the Son of Ziyàd, or elſe fighting them at ſo great a diſadvantage: How heroically he had behaved himſelf in preferring an honourable Death to an ignominious Life: He magnified his Merits, and reminded them of his exemplary Sanctity, his frequent Watchings, Faſtings and Prayers; in a word, whatſoever might contribute towards the endearing his Memory, and ſtir up in the People a deſire of Revenge, and an utter Abhorrence and Deteſtation of that Government which was the Cauſe of his death. The People who were always well affected to Hoſein heard theſe Diſcourſes with delight, and Abdollah's Party grew very ſtrong. When Yezid heard of his Progreſs he ſwore he would have him in Chains, and accordingly ſent a Silver Collar for him to Merwan then Governour of Medinah, with Orders to put it about his Neck, and ſend him with it to Damaſcus, in caſe he perſiſted in his Attempts; but Abdollah ridiculed both them and their Collar.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 61. cœpit Sept. 30. A. C. 680.

There was at this time one Abdollah the Son of Amrou in Ægypt, a Perſon of great repute for his profound Underſtanding: He uſed to ſtudy the Prophet Daniel. Amrou the Son of Saïd, Governour of Meccah, ſent to him to know what he thought of this Man, meaning Abdollah, the Son of Zobeir: He anſwered, That he thought of him no otherwiſe than as of a Man that would carry his Point, and live and dye a King. This Anſwer from a Man of his Character gave great Encouragement to Abdollah and his Party, for it had a great Influence upon the generality of the People. Amrou the Son of Saïd, the Governour of Meccah, was in his Heart a mortal Enemy to Abdollah and his Pretenſions, yet ſtill he thought it the beſt way to carry it fair with him. Some of Yezid's Courtiers repreſented to him, that if Amrou had been heartily in his Intereſt, it was in his power to have ſeized Abdollah and ſent him to him; upon which Suggeſtion Yezid removed him, and put Waled the Son of Otbah into his Place. YEZID I. An. Heg. 62. cœpit Sept. 19. A. C. 681.

racter

[2] As ſoon as Waled had taken Poſſeſſion of his new Government of Meccah, he began to exert his Authority by impriſoning Three Hundred of the Servants and Dependants of his Predeceſſor Amrou. Amrou ſent a private Meſſage to them to bid them break the Priſon at ſuch an Hour, promiſing them that there ſhould be a ſufficient number of Camels ready for them kneeling in the Street; which they ſhould immediately mount, and repair to him, who was going to wait upon Yezid. This ſucceeded; and when Amrou came before Yezid he firſt received him courteouſly, and bad him ſit down by him, and then began to rebuke him for his Remiſſneſs in the execution of his Commands, and not taking ſufficient care to ſuppreſs Abdollah. To which he answered, "Governour of the Faithful, he that is present sees more than he that is absent; the greatest Part of the People of Hejaz and Meccah were favourably inclined to his Party, and encouraged one another as well in publick as in private; besides, I had no Forces sufficient to oppose them, if I had attempted it; however he was always upon his Guard and in fear of me, and I carried it fair with him in order to take a proper Opportunity of getting him into my Power: Notwithstanding his Interest and Caution I streightened him, and hindered him from doing a great many Things; I placed Men round about the Streets and Passages of Meccah, that suffered no Man to pass till he had written down his own Name and his Father's, and from which of God's Countries he came, and what was his Business: And if he was any of his Friends, or whom I suspected to favour his Designs, I sent him packing; if otherwise, I permitted him quietly to go about his Concerns; and now you have sent Waled the Son of Otbah, who in all probability will give you such an account of his Administration, as will justify my Conduct, and convince you of the sincerity of my Advice." Yezid was very well satisfied, and told him, "that he was an honester Man than they that had incensed him against him,

[2] An. Heg. 62. cœpit Sept. 19. A. C. 681.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 62. cœpit Sept. 19. A. C. 681.

" him, and that he ſhould depend upon him " for the future?" [7] In the mean time the new Governour Waled was imploying all his Skill to enſnare Abdollah, who was always upon his Guard, and was ſtill too cunning for him. There was at the ſame time upon the Death of Hoſein, one Naidah a Yemamian, that appeared with a body of Men, not againſt Abdollah, but Yezid; as for Abdollah, he and Naidah were ſo familiar, that it was generally believed, that Naidah would give him his Allegianee. Quickly after [8] Abdollah ſent a Letter to Yezid, complaining that he had ſent a Fool of a Governour thither, that was not capable of ſuch a Truſt: That if he ſent a Man of a tractable Diſpoſition, their Differences might be compromiſed as well for the good of the Publick, as their own in particular. Yezid, deſirous of Peace upon any Terms, indiſcreetly hearkens to the Advice of his mortal Enemy, removes Waled, and ſends Othman the Son of Mahomet and Grandſon of Abuſophyan: This Othman was by no means qualified for a Truſt of that Importance, being Raw, Ignorant, and altogether unexperienced, not capable of looking into any Part of his Buſineſs. He ſent Ambaſſadors from Medinah to Yezid, who received them kindly, and gave them Preſents; but they took ſuch Offence at his converſation, that when they returned, they did all they could to inflame the People againſt him: They told the Medinians that they were come from a Man that had no Religion at all; that he was frequently drunk with Wine, and minded nothing but his Tabors, his ſinging Wenches, and his Dogs; that he uſed to ſpend whole Evenings in talking with vile Fellows, and ſinging Girls, and they declared that for their Part, they did depoſe him; in which Action they were followed by a great many, and it is ſaid that they gave their Allegiance to one Abdollah the Son of Hantelah. Almúndir, who was one of the Ambaſſadors, did not return with them to Medinah, but went to Obeidollah to Baſorah, who entertained him in his Houſe, with a great deal of Friendſhip, for they were old Acquaintance. As ſoon as Yezid was informed, how the reſt of the Ambaſſadors had uſed him at Medinah, he wrote to Obeidollah to bind Almundir, and keep him cloſe till further Orders. Obeidollah looked upon this to be a breach of the Rules of Hoſpitality, and inſtead of obeying the Order, ſhewed it to Almundir, adviſing him when the People were come together, to pretend very urgent Buſineſs, and in the Preſence of them all to aſk leave to be gone. This granted, away goes Almundir full of Reſentment to Medinah, and there confirms all that the other Ambaſſadors had ſaid before to the Reproach proach of Yezid; adding, that though he confeſſed that Yezid had preſented him with an Hundred Pieces, yet that could not influence him ſo far, as to hinder him from ſpeaking what he was a Witneſs of, relating to his Drunkenneſs, idle Converſation, and neglecting the Prayers oftner than any of his Men. Yezid was informed of all, and vowed to be revenged on him for his Ingratitude. YEZID I. An. Heg. 62. cœpit Sept. 19. A. C. 681.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 62. cœpit Sept 19. A. C. 681.

[7] MS. Laud. Num. 161. A. [8] MS. Hunt. Naidah.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 62. cœpit Sept. 19. A.C. 681.

Then Yezid ſent Nóoman the Son of Baſhìr to Medinah, to quiet the People, and perſuade them to return to their Duty and Allegiance: When he came there, he repreſented to them the folly of their Proceedings, and the Danger they expoſed themſelves to, by ſuch ſeditious Practices; aſſuring them that they were not a Match for the Forces of Syria. One of them aſked him what Motive induced him to come upon ſuch Errand, and make Diviſion among them after they were agreed? Nóoman told him, Becauſe he was loath there ſhould be any Blood ſhed between the two Parties, and ſee theſe poor Creatures (meaning the Anſars or Inhabitants of Medinah) killed in their Streets, and Moſques, and in the Doors of their own Houſes. They would not be ruled by him, and he left them; but what he gave them fair Warning of, they found afterwards too true.

The

YEZID I. An. Heg. 62. cœpit Sept. 19. A. C. 681.

The Medinians in their Obſtinacy having renounced all Allegiance to Yezid, ſet over the Koreiſh, Abdollah the Son of Mothi, and over the Anſars, Abdollah the Son of Hantelah, a Noble Perſon of excellent Endowments, very Religious, and very much reverenced by all: He had Eight Sons went along with him on the Embaſſy. Yezid preſented him with an Hundred Thouſand Pieces, and every one of his Sons with Ten Thouſand; beſides their Veſts. In the beginning of the Sixty Third Year they broke out into open Rebellion, after this manner: When they were gathered together in the Moſque round about the Pulpit, one of them ſaid, I lay aſide Yezid as I lay aſide this Turbant, throwing his Turbant againſt the Ground. Another ſaid, I put away Yezid as I put away this Shoe; which Examples were followed till there was a great Heap of Shoes and Turbants. The next ſtep they took was to turn out Yezid's Lieutenant Othmam, and baniſh all the Family of Ommiyah, together with all their Friends and Dependants, from Medinah: They being about a Thouſand, took Refuge in Merwan the Son of Hakem's Houſe, where the Medinians beſieged them ſo cloſely that they ſent word to Yezid, That unleſs they received ſpeedy Relief they muſt inevitably periſh. Yezid wondered, when he heard they were ſo many, that they ſhould ſuffer

YEZID I. An. Heg. 63. cœpit Sept. 9. A. C. 682.

ſuffer themſelves to be ſo confined without making the leaſt Reſiſtance, and aſked Amrou, the Son of Saëd, Whom he thought the fitteſt Perſon to be ſent upon this Expedition; offering it at the ſame time to him: Amrou excuſed himſelf, and told him, That he had done him all the Service he could there before, and he was pleaſed to remove him from his Government; now ſince the Blood of the Coreiſh was to be poured upon the Duſt, he begged that ſomebody not ſo nearly related to them as he was, might be imployed in that Buſineſs. Upon this he ſends for Meſlém, the Son of Okbah, who, though very ancient and infirm, was willing to undertake the Command of the Forces, conſiſting of Twelve Thouſand Horſe and Five Thouſand Foot. Meſlém told Yezid that thoſe Thouſand Men that ſuffered themſelves to be ſo diſtreſſed without fighting did not deſerve any Aſſiſtance; That they had neither ſhewn perſonal Courage nor Loyalty to their Sultan; That they ought to be let alone till they had exerted themſelves, and deſerved Encouragement; but Yezid told him that his Life would do him no good if they were not ſafe. Yezid rode about with his Sword by his ſide, and an Arabian Bow over his Shoulders, viewing the Troops, and giving Directions to his General Meſlém; particularly, That he ſhould take care of Ali, the

YEZID I. An. Heg. 63. cœpit Sept. 9. A. C. 682.

the Son of Hoſein, concerning whom he had been informed that he was not at all in the Meaſures of the Rebels, nor any of his Family, wherefore he commanded him to ſhew him reſpect, and place him next him. That as for the Town, he ſhould ſummons it Three Days ſucceſſively, and if they did not ſurrender themſelves upon the Summons, after he had taken it he ſhould leave it for Three Days entirely to the Mercy of the Soldiers.

The Medinians refuſed to ſurrender, and the General made Preparations for a Storm; he was adviſed to make his Aſſault on the Eaſt-ſide, that the Beſieged might have the Sun in their Faces; this proved of ſervice to him: The Medinians made a vigorous Defence; they had made a large Ditch round about the City, and held out a conſiderable time, till in the end moſt of the Anſars and conſiderable Men being killed; they finding themſelves preſſed would have ſurrendered, but Meſlém, from whoſe Hands they refuſed Peace at the beginning of the Siege, would not receive them but at Diſcretion.

Then entering the City with Sword in Hand, he firſt ſent for Ali and treated him with reſpect, and to quiet all his Apprehenſions of Fear, and diſmiſs him honourably, he called for his own Camel and ſent him home upon it; then they put all to the Sword that they met, plundered every every thing that was valuable, and got a Thousand of the Women with Child. Without any reverence to its being the Burying-Place of the Prophet they sacked it for Three Days, and those that escaped the edge of the Sword Meslém took under the Protection of the Government, but only upon this Condition, [7] That they should own themselves Slaves and Vassals to Yezid; upon which Account he purchased the Name of Musriph, which signifies in Arabick, extravagant, exorbitant, because he had exceeded in the execution of his Orders. This Battle was fought when there were Three Nights left of the Month Dulhagiah.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

Meslém having thus severely chastised the Insolence of the Medinians, marched directly with his Army towards Meccah, but died by the way, in the Month Moharram of the Sixty fourth Year. Upon his Death, Hosein took upon him the command of the Army, and Besieged Abdollah in Meccah the Space of Forty Days, during which time he battered it so roughly that he beat down a great part of the Temple, and burnt the rest; and this City had run the same Fortune with Medinah, if the News of Yezid's Death had not recalled Hosein into Syria.

[8] Abdollah heard of Yezid's Decease before the Syrian Army had received any Intelligence of [7] Abulpheda. [8] MS. Laud. Num. 161. A.

it,

YEZID I. An. Heg. 64. capit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

it, and called out to them from the Walls, and asked them what they fought for, for their Master was dead: But they would not believe him, but continued their Siege with great Vigour, till they received further Information. Hosein having heard that News, told Abdollah that he was of Opinion, that it would be the best way to forbear shedding any more Blood, and proffered him his Allegiance, if he would accept of the Government, assuring him that all this Army, wherein were the leading Men of all Syria, would be in his Interest, and that there was no fear of any Opposition; but he durst not trust him: As they were talking together, just where the Pidgeons that flew from the Temple of Meccah were pecking something upon the Ground, Hosein turned his Horse aside, which Abdollah taking notice of, asked him the Reason; he said he was afraid his Horse should kill the Temple Pidgeons; Abdollah asked him how he could scruple that, and at the same time kill the Muslemans? Hosein told him that he would not fight against him any more, and only desired that they might have leave to go round the Temple of Meccah, before their Departure; which was granted. Some say that that Temple was not set on Fire by the Engines, but that Abdollah hearing in the Night a shouting from the Mountains of Meccah, put Fire

YEZID I. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

Fire upon the end of a Spear, to see if he could make any Discovery; which being wafted with the Wind, the Sparks laid hold first on the Hangings, and then took the Wood-work. Abdollah afterwards, when it was too late, repented his Refusal of Hosein's Proffer; and those of the House of Ommiyah, that were in Medinah, accompanied Hosein into Syria.

[8] Yezid died in Hawwarin, in the Territories of Hems, when four Nights were passed of the first Rebiyah, in the Sixty fourth Year of the Hegirah, in the Thirty ninth Year of his Age, after he had Reigned three Years and six Months. He was a Man of a ruddy Complexion, with curled Hair, black Eyes, pitted with the Small-Pox: He had a handsome Beard, and was a thin tall Man, he left behind him several Children of both Sexes: His Son Caled is reported to have been skilled in the Art of Alchimy, and his Son Abdollah to have been the most exact Archer of all the Arabians in his time. His Mother's Name was Meisun of the Family of the Kelabi; she was an excellent Poetess, and had pleased Moawiyah's Fancy to that degree with some of her Verses, that he made her go back into the Desart amongst her own Relations, and take her Son Yezid along with her, that he might be brought up a Poet

[8] Abulpheda.

too.

YEZID I. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

too. This Part of his Education succeeded, for he was reckoned to excell that way, though his chief Talent consisted in making a drunken Catch.

[1] It is observed of him, that he was the first Caliph that drank Wine publickly, and was waited upon by Eunuchs; besides they reproach him with bringing up, and being fond of Dogs, which the more scrupulous Mahometans have in Abomination.

But the greatest Vices of this Caliph, were his Impiety and Covetousness, which occasioned a [2] certain Author to say, that to make the Empire of the Muslemans flourish, it ought to be in the Hands of Princes either pious, such as were the first four Caliphs, or liberal, as Moawiyah; but when it was governed by a Prince that had neither Piety nor Generosity, such an one as Yezid, all would be lost.

[3] The Mahometan Doctors look upon Yezid's allowing the Soldiers to commit such abominable Outrages in the City of the Prophet, [4] and suffering it to be so prophaned, as a very wicked Action: They do not scruple to say, that he did it, imagining to preserve his Life and Government; but God dealt with him as a Tyrant, and the being cut off in the Flower

[1] D'Herbelot. [2] Rabi Alakyar. [3] MS. Hunt. Num. 495. [4] MS. Laud. Num. 161. A.

of

of his Age, was a Judgment inflicted upon him for that Presumption. They quote this saying of Mahomet, Whoever injureth Medinah shall melt away, even as Salt melteth away in the Water. YEZID I. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

[2] All the Persian Authors never mention him but with abomination, and ordinarily add this Imprecation to his Name, Laanahùllah, that is, The curse of God be upon him; which they do not do upon the account of his Vices, but because of the Death of Hosein, the Son of Ali, whom he attempted to destroy by Poison, and whom he afterwards caused to be killed with all his Family on the Plains of Kerbelah.

Under his Caliphate the Muslemans conquered all Chorasân and Chowarezm, and put the Estates of the Prince of Samarkand under Contribution. The Motto of his Seal was, God is our Lord.

[2] D'Herbelot.

The Third Chaliph of the Houſe of Ommiyah, (being the Eighth from MAHOMET.)

MOAWIYAH,

The Son of YEZID.

Moawiyah II. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

AS ſoon as Yezid was dead, his Son Moawiyah was proclaimed Chaliph at Damaſcus; he was near one and twenty Years of Age,[1] a religious young Man and of a very weak Conſtitution; he was of the Sect of the Alcadarii (who are a Branch of the Motázeli, and differ in their Opinions from the Orthodox Muſlemans in that they deny God's Decree, and aſſert Free-Will; affirming, that the contrary Opinion makes God the Author of Evil) and his favourite Maſter was Omar Almekſous: Him he conſulted to know whether he ought to accept the Chaliphate or not: His Maſter told him, that if he found himſelf able to adminiſter Juſtice exactly to the Muſlemans, and to acquit himſelf of all the Duties of that Dignity, that he ought to accept it; otherwiſe that he ought not to charge himſelf with it. Moawiyah II. An. Heg. 64. cæpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

[1] Abulpheda. Abulpheragius. D'Herbelot.

ties

This Chaliph had ſcarce reigned the Space of ſix Weeks, but he found himſelf too weak to ſuſtain the Weight of the Government, and took a Reſolution to lay it down. To this End he called a Council of the Greateſt Men of the Court, and told them, That when he firſt entertained the Thought of abdicating himſelf, he deſigned to follow the Example of Abubeker, and nominate a Succeſſor as that firſt Chaliph had done his; but that he had not found, as he had done, Men like Omar upon whom to ſettle his Choice. Then he told them, that he had alſo a Deſign of imitating Omar, and naming ſix Perſons upon one of which the Choice ſhould fall by Lot; but that he had not found ſo many among them capable of it, and therefore could not determine himſelf to fix upon that Number.

I am therefore reſolved, added he, to leave the Choice entirely to your Diſpoſal; upon which the principal Stateſmen having told him, that they had nothing to do but to chuſe that Perſon amongſt them that he ſhould pleaſe, and that all the reſt would obey him, Moawiyah anſwered them in theſe Terms; As I have not hitherto enjoyed the Advantages of the Chaliphate, it is not reaſonable that I ſhould charge my ſelf with the moſt odious Part that belongs to it; therefore I hope that you will not take it amiſs if I diſcharge my Conſcience towards you, and that you judge for yourſelves who is moſt capable amongſt you to fill my Place.

Moawiyah II. An. Heg. 64. capit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

As ſoon as Moawiyah had made his Abdication in ſo good Form, they proceeded to the Election of a Chaliph, and the Choice fell upon Merwan the Son of Hakem, who was the Fourth of the Chaliphs of Syria; Abdollah the Son of Zobéir having been declared Chaliph in Arabia, Iràk, Choraſàn, Ægypt, and a great Part of Syria.

Moawiyah had no ſooner renounced the Chaliphate but he ſhut himſelf up in a Chamber, from whence he never ſtirred till he died, ſome ſay of the Plague, others by Poiſon, not long after his Abdication; and they ſay that the Family of Ommiyah was ſo very much irritated at his Proceeding, that they made their Reſentment break out upon the Perſon of Omar Almekſous, whom they buried alive, becauſe they ſuppoſed that he had adviſed Moawiyah to depoſe himſelf. This Chaliph was nick-named Abuleilah, that is to ſay, The Father of the Night, becauſe of his natural Weakneſs and want of Health, which hindered him from appearing much abroad in the Day time. The Inſcription of his Seal was, The World is a Cheat.

We

[2] We must now look backwards a little towards the Eastean Parts of the Empire. As soon as Obeidollah heard of Yezid's Death, he acquainted the Basorians with it in a set Speech, wherein he represented, "the near Relation that he had "to them, that the Place of his Nativity was "amongst them, that as appeared by the Books, "he had since his Government over them de-"stroyed an Hundred and Forty Thousand of "their Enemies; that there was no Person left "of any Consideration whom they need to fear, "but what was already in their Prisons; That "they were every way the most considerable "Nation in the Empire, both with regard to "their Courage, Number and Extent of Coun-"try; that they were very well able to subsist "independent on any help, but that the rest of "the Provinces were not able to subsist with-"out them: That there was a Faction in "Syria, and till that was appeased, he thought "it adviseable for them to chuse a Person duly "qualified to be the Protector of their State: "That after that was done, if the Muslemans "agreed upon a Successor that they approved it "would be well; if otherwise, they might con-"tinue as they were, till they did." The Basorians approved of his Proposal, and told him, that they knew no Person so well qualified for such a Trust as himself: He refused it several times, affectedly as may be ſuppoſed by his Speech, but accepted it at laſt, overcome by their Importunity: So they gave him their Hands to be ſubject to him till all things were ſettled, and the Muſlemans were agreed upon an Imàm or Chaliph. This done he ſent a Meſſenger to the Cufians, to perſuade them to follow the Example of the Baſorians: The Cufians received the Meſſage with Indignation, and were ſo far from complying with it, that they flung Duſt upon their Governour. Though the Cufians did not follow the Example of the Baſorians, yet the Baſorians followed theirs; for perceiving the Repulſe he met with at Cufah, they revoked their Subjection to him; and the Faction ran ſo high, that finding Baſorah too warm for him, he made the beſt of his way into Syria.

Moawiyah II. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

[2] MS. Laud. Numb. 161. A.

Moawiyah II. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

There was at that time in the Treaſury of Baſorah ſixteen Millions of Money, part of which he divided among his Relations; the Remainder he carried along with him: He would have perſuaded the Najári, which are a Tribe of the Arabian Anſars, to have fought for him, but they refuſed it, as did alſo all his own Relations; for he had rendered himſelf ſo obnoxious by his Cruelty, that he was dreaded and abhorred by all, beloved by none. His Brother Abdollah told the Baſorians, that ſince they had promiſed their Subjection, he and his Brother Obeidollah would not fly away from them, but

ſtay

ſtay and be killed, and leave it as a reproach upon them till the Day of Judgment. Obeidollah lay concealed in Women's Cloaths in Meſoud's Houſe, who adviſed him to ſcatter Money liberally among the People, and oblige them to renew their Oath: Abdollah his Brother tryed his utmoſt with Two hundred thouſand Pieces, and Meſoud ſtirred for him as much as he was able, till at laſt he was killed in the Tumult, though upon an old Grudge. Obeidollah was at laſt conſtrained to fly, and as ſoon as he was gone, they plundered his Effects, and purſued him. He had an hundred Men with him, that were left him by Meſoud. In the Night time he grew weary of Riding upon his Camel, and exchanged it for an Aſs. One of his Friends obſerving him riding in that manner with his Feet dangling down to the Ground, began to reflect upon the Uncertainty of Human Affairs, and ſay to himſelf, This Man was Yeſterday Governour of Irák, and is now forced to make his Eſcape upon an Aſs: Then riding up to him (for he had been ſilent a long time) he aſked him if he was aſleep, he ſaid No, he was talking to himſelf; the other told him, he knew what it was that he talked to himſelf; and that was, I wiſh I had not killed Hoſein. Obeidollah told him he was miſtaken, for he choſe rather to kill Hoſein, than to be killed by him: Then having firſt mentioned some part of his Substance, and how he intended to dispose of it, he said, what he was sorry for, and what he was speaking to himself was, that he wished he had fought the Basorians at the beginning of their Revolt, and struck their Heads off for their Perjury: But if he had attempted it, he might have lost his own, for the Caregites, who were his mortal Enemies, were got to a great head, and resolved either to kill him, or to drive him from Basorah.

Moawiyah II. An. Heg. 64. cæpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

Moawiyah II. An. Heg. 64. cæpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

We leave him therefore riding upon his Ass, and talking to himself, and return to Hosein, who was come back much about this time from the Siege of Meccah to Damascus: He gave an account in what Posture he had left Matters on that side of the Country, and how he had proffered his Allegiance to Abdollah, who had refused to accept it, at least to come into Syria; he told Merwan, and the rest of the Family of Ommiyah, that they would do well to look about them in time, their Affairs being at this time in a confused perplexed Condition; that they ought to settle the Government, before Faction, which is both deaf and blind, should overwhelm them: Merwan was for submitting to Abdollah, but Obeidollah told him, that it was a shame for a Person of his Distinction, who was the head of the noble Family of the Coreish, to think of any thing so mean. The People of Damaſcus had conſtituted Dehàc, the Son of Kais, their Protector, till the Muſlemans ſhould be agreed upon an Imàm: Dehàc favoured Abdollah, and Haſſan the Son of Malec was in that part of Paleſtine that lay near Jordan, and was of the Party of the Houſe of Ommiyah. The Baſorians were altogether in Tumult and Confuſion, and could not agree about a Governour, during the interegnum; they ſet up firſt one, and then another, till at laſt they wrote to Abdollah, to take the Government upon him.

Da-

Moawiyah II. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29. A.C. 683.

ABDOL-

ABDOLLAH,

The Son of ZOBEIR,

(The Ninth from MAHOMET;) he was not of the Houſe of Ommiyah.

Abdollah. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

THERE being two Caliphs at the ſame time time will of neceſſity occaſion the Repetition of a few Circumſtances, which will give no Offence to an ingenious Reader. Though Abdollah was proclaimed before in the Days of Yezid, yet this is the Place that our Arabian Authors aſſign him in their Hiſtories, becauſe he ſeemed now to be fully ſettled and eſtabliſhed, all the Territories of the Muſlemans being entirely under his Command, Syria only excepted; But whenever we ſpeak of the entire Subjection of the Mahometan Countries, we muſt not be underſtood of the Hereticks and Schiſmaticks, the Caregites and Motázeli, for they, as we have obſerved already, would never be Subject to any; but upon the leaſt Proſpect of a favourable Opportunity, uſed their utmoſt Efforts to break from off their Necks the Yoke of all Government whatſoever.

As

[1] As soon as Yezid was dead, the People of Meccah stood up for Abdollah, the Son of Zobeir: Merwan the Son of Hakem (who was of the House of Ommiyah) was then at Medinah, and was preparing himself to go to Abdollah, and acknowledge him; for all took it for granted that his Interest was so powerful, that it would be to no purpose to oppose him; when on a sudden there was a Report spread, that Abdollah had sent word to his Deputy in Medinah, to leave never a Man alive there of the House of Ommiyah: Instead of which, if he had gone along with Hosein, as he would have persuaded him, or had he caressed Merwan and the House of Ommiyah, he had been immoveably fixed in the Government. But there is no reversing what God hath decreed. When they Proclaimed him at Meccah, Obeidollah was at Basorah, from whence he fled into Syria, as we have seen before: The Basorians, Irakians, Hejazians, Yemanians and Ægyptians, all came in to Abdollah; besides he had a strong private Party even in Syria it self, and in Kinnisrin and Hems: In short, they were very near coming in universally, but he wanted some Qualifications necessary for such a Juncture: He was brave and courageous enough, and exemplarily Religious, but he wanted both Capacity and Generosity.

Abdollah. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

[1] Abulpheda.

The

The Fourth Chaliph of the Houſe of Ommiyah; (Being the Tenth from MAHOMET.)

MERWAN,

The Son of HAKEM.

Merwàn I. An. Heg. 64. cæpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

UPON this Rumour of Abdollah's thus ſeverely threatning the Houſe of Ommiyah, Merwàn made haſte into Syria, where his Friends came about him, and, reſolved to ſtand upon their own Defence, Proclaimed him Chaliph; ſo that Syria was divided into two Factions: Haſſàn and the Yemanians in Syria ſtood for Merwàn, and Dehàc the Son of Kais for Abdollah: This Dehàc was a Man of great Note; he had been at the firſt Siege of Damaſcus, and in the Fifty fourth Year Moawiyah made him his Deputy over Cufah; And becauſe the General's Father's Name was Kais, the Party that followed him were called the Kaiſians: There were a great many Parleys between them, which it would be too tedious to relate; at laſt they brought it to a deciſive Battel in the Plains or Meadows of Damaſcus; the Iſſue was, that the Kai- Kaiſians were moſt ſhamefully beaten, and Dehàc himſelf killed, and there was made a great ſlaughter amongſt the Horſe, When the Kaiſians were routed, Merwàn ſounded a Retreat, and would not ſuffer his Men to purſue. There were killed with Dehàc no leſs than Fourſcore of the Nobles of Syria. When Dehac's Head was brought to Merwàn, he expreſſed ſome concern and ſaid, That I who am an old Man, whoſe Bones are waſted, and am next to nothing, ſhould bring Armies together to break one another in Pieces! Merwàn I. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

He then went into Damaſcus, and took up his Lodgings at the Houſe where Moawiyah uſed to reſide; and there he married Yezid's Widow, becauſe it was agreed that Merwàn ſhould not transfer the Government to his own Poſterity, but leave it to Yezid's Son Caled, who was then a Minor, and of whom the People had ſome Expectation: Wherefore his Friends thought it more ſecure for him to marry Caled's Mother, and take upon him the Guardianſhip of the Child, than run the Riſque of ſtanding upon the ſole Foundation of his own Intereſt.

When the News of the Defeat of the Kaiſians and the Death of Dehàc came to Emeſſa, which was under the Command of Nóoman the Son of Baſhir, he fled away with his Wife and Family; but the Emeſſians purſued him, cut off his Head,

Merwàn I. An. Heg. 64. cæpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

Head, and brought it together with his Wife and Family to Emeſſa.

Merwàn after this marched towards Ægypt, and ſent before him Amrou the Son of Saëd, who going into Ægypt turned out Abdollah's Lieutenant, and brought the Ægyptians to own Merwàn for their Sovereign: As he was upon his Return towards Damaſcus, News was brought him that Abdollah had ſent his Brother Mus'ab againſt him with an Army; wherefore he turned back and routed Mus'ab before he entered into Damaſcus.

This Year the People of Choraſan choſe Salem the Son of Ziyàd, who was their Governour before, for their Protector, till the Muſſemans ſhould be agreed in the Choice of an Imàm; he continued in that Poſt about two Months: The People of the Country never had any Governour that they loved ſo well; they reſpected him to that Degree, that in thoſe few Years that he governed them, there were more than twenty Thouſand Children named Salem purely out of Love to his Name.

This Year the Sect of Ali began to ſtir in Cufah, in order to rendezvous in Nochailah in the next Year following, that they might march into Syria to revenge the Death of Hoſein, and ſent circular Letters to their Friends round about the Country concerning it: The Occaſion was this; When the Cufians after Hofein was killed came to reflect cooly upon that Matter, their Conſciences accuſed them of not having dealt with him ſo generouſly as they were obliged both in Honour and Duty, and they thought there could be no Attonement made for ſuch a Crime but the taking up Arms to revenge his Death: They therefore applied themſelves to five leading Men of the Sect, Solyman the Son of Soràd who was one of the Companions; and Moſabbib the Son of Nahbah, one of the choiceſt Friends of Ali: Abdollah the Son of Saïd; Abdollah the Son of Wali; and Rephaah the Son of Shadad. Theſe all met together in Solyman's Houſe, beſides a great many others of the chief Men of the Sect, to whom Moſabbib made a Speech wherein he aggravated the Heinouſneſs of their Neglect "in having deſerted Hoſein "after ſo ſolemn an Invitation, and having re- "ceived ſo many Letters and Meſſages from "him; that they had neither aſſiſted him with "their Hands, nor ſpoke for him with their "Tongues, nor ſupported him with their Mo- "ney, nor looked out for any Aſſiſtance for "him. What Excuſe muſt they have when "they ſhould come to appear before God, or "how ſhould they be able to look his Prophet "in the Face, when by their Means his [4] Son

was

Merwàn I. An. Heg. 64. cœpit. Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

[4] Grandſon, as before.

"was

Merwân I. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29. A.C. 683.

" was killed, and his beloved and his Offspring " and his Posterity cut off! That there was no " way to attone for this but by revenging his " Death upon his Murderers, which was no " hard Matter, provided they chose a proper " General, one that the People would be wil- " ling to fight under." This was seconded by Rephaáh, who added, that as to a General, his Opinion was, that they should chuse the chief of the Sect, a Person reverenced by all for his Years, Dignity, Piety and Experience, Solyman the Son of Soràd. Solyman having first made a Speech suitable to the Occasion, accepted the Command; and when some other Persons arose and made Speeches to urge on the Matter (for there were above an Hundred of the chief Men amongst them) he told them, that there was enough said already, and the next Step they ought to take should be to put what each of them designed to contribute into the Hands of Abdollah the Son of Wali, to be distributed among the poorest of the Sect. The Contents of Solyman's circular Letter were as followeth.

In the Name of the most Merciful God.

FROM Solyman the Son of Sorad to Saëd the Son of Hodaiphah and whosoever is with him of the Muslemans; Peace be to you. The present World is a Mansion upon which every Thing that is

is good turneth its Back, and to which every Thing that is bad draweth near, (or turneth its Face;) and treateth Persons of uprightness ill. The chosen Servants of God have resolved to leave it, and to sell the little of the present World that remaineth not, for the great Reward that is with God and shall never fail. The Friends of God, your Brethren of the Sect of the Family of your Prophet, have considered with themselves the Tryal they have undergone in the Business of the Son of the Daughter of your Prophet, who was called and answered, and called and was not answered; and would have returned but was detained; and asked for Security but was hindered; and he let the People alone but they would not let him alone, but dealt injuriously by him and killed him, and then spoiled him and stripped him wickedly, despightfully and foolishly. Nor did they act as in the Sight of God, neither had they recourse to God, [8] and they that have done Evil shall know what shall be the End of their Actions. Now what your Brethren have seriously considered concerning the Events of what they were engaged in before is this. They see they have sinned in deceiving the innocent, the good; and in the delivering him up, and the omitting the healing and helping him. A great Sin! from which there is no Way left for them to escape, nor any Repentance without killing

Merwàn I. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug 29. A. C. 683.

[8] Alcoran passim.

Merwân I. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

thoſe that killed him, or being killed themſelves and reſigning their Spirits upon this account. Now therefore your Brethren are beſtirring themſelves in Earneſt, and your Enemy; therefore do you get together all the Aſſiſtance you are able: And we have fixed a certain Time for our Brethren to meet us at a Place appointed. The Time is the New Moon of the Month of the latter Rebiyah, in the ſixty fifth Year, and the Place where they ſhall meet us is Nochâilah; O ye who never ceaſe to be of our Sect and our Brethren! And we determined to invite you to this Buſineſs which God would have your Brethren undertake, as they ſay, and they ſhow to us that they repent, and that you are Perſons duly qualified for the Search of Excellency, and the laying hold of the Reward and Repentance towards your Lord from your Sin, though it be the cutting off your Necks, and the killing your Children, and the Conſumption of your Wealth, and the Deſtruction of your Tribes and Families. [4] He [God] hath not hurt the couragious religious Men that were killed, but they are now alive with their Lord, ſuſtained as Martyrs, they met their Lord enduring (Affliction) patiently; they are made account of, and God hath given them the Reward of good Men. [5] — If it pleaſe God, perſevere patiently in Tri-

[4] It is a Saying of Mahomet's. [5] The next Sentence is much to the ſame Purpoſe, but it is obſcurely repreſented in the Manuſcript, and I have not yet found it in the Alcoran.

bulation

bulation and Affliction and the Day of Battel (God have Mercy upon you!) for it is not fit that any of your Brethren ſhould perſevere in any Affliction in ſeeking his Repentance, but you are worthy and fit to ſeek the like Reward by the ſame Means; neither is it fit that any one ſhould ſeek the Favour of God by any Means, though it were Death it ſelf, but you ſhould ſeek it by the ſame Means. [3] For the beſt Voyage Proviſion is the fear of God in this World, and every Thing beſides ſhall periſh and vaniſh away. Wherefore let your Souls be aſſured of this, and your Deſire be fixed upon the Manſion of your Safety, and the engaging in the Holy War againſt the Enemy of God and your Enemy; and the Enemy of the Family of the Daughter of your Prophet, till you come before God with Repentance and Deſire. God preſerve both us and you to the happy Life, and remove both us and you from Hell, and grant it may be our Reward to dye by the Hands of that part of Mankind that is the moſt odious of all to him, and are his moſt vehement Enemies. He is the moſt Powerful over what he pleaſes, and diſpoſeth of his Friends according to his Will. Farewel to you.

Merwân I. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

[4] Saëd read the Letter to all the People, who readily gave their Aſſent, and diſpatched a very encouraging Anſwer to Solyman and his Friends.

[3] Alcoran. [4] MS. Laud. Num. 161. A.

Merwàn I. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

The truth of the Matter is, that the Sect of Ali had been contriving this Affair from the time of Hosein's death till the death of Yezid the Son of Moawiyah, (which was Three Years, Two Months, and Four Days) and had sent privately to one another, and laid up Magazines, and strengthened their Party.

Six Months after Yezid's death, in the midst of the Month Ramadàn, Almoktar came to Cufah, and along with him came Ibrahim, the Son of Mahomet the Son of Telha, to take care of the Tribute of Cufah on the side of Abdollah the Son of Zobeir: The Sect of (Ali) readily joined themselves to this Captain Almoktàr, who made use of the Authority of [7] Mohammed, the Son of Haniphiyah, who was Ali's Son, and the Hopes of the Party: He told them he was come to them as a Counsellor and a trusty Assistant from the Son of Alhanifiyah, which Circumstance, added to their Confidence in his known Abilities, endeared him to them exceedingly. He made it his Business to disparage Solyman, the Son of Sórad, as a Person by no means qualified for the Trust he had undertaken, but one that would most certainly destroy both them and himself, having no manner of Experience in warlike Affairs. Abdollah, the Son of Yezid, was then Governour

[7] See the Catalogue of Ali's Children at the end of his Life.

of

of Cufah, and having received Information that the Sect had a Design to seize the City, he called a Congregation " and told them that these " People pretended indeed to seek Revenge for " Hosein's death, but he could not easily be in- " duced to believe that that was the bottom of " their Intention; That for his own part they " had no Reason to fight against him who was " no manner of way concerned in the Matter, " but had been a Sufferer upon that Account: " That if they would in good earnest follow " those up close who were guilty of the Death " of Hosein, he should be willing to assist them." Then turning to the People he said: " In short " it was the Son of Ziyàd that killed Hosein, " and that killed the most valuable Men amongst " you; and the best thing you can do is to make " Preparation of War against him, who is the " greatest Enemy you have in the whole Crea- " tion, rather than exercise your Force upon " one another, and shed each others Blood." Ibrahim the Collector rose up and bad the People not be deceived with his smooth Speeches, and declared, that if any of them rose up in Arms they should be put to death both Father and Son without distinction. As he was proceeding, Mosabbib cut him off short, and asked him, whether he pretended to threaten or terrifie them? That it was more than lay in his power; we have, says he, already killed your Father and Grandfather, and we hope, before you go out of this Country, you shall be the third. Ibrahim threatened him with Death, when Abdollah the Son of Wali stood up, and asked Ibrahim what Business he had to intermeddle between them and their Governour, telling him that he had no manner of Authority over them, but he might get him about his Business, and look after his Tax. The Sect were wonderfully pleased with Abdollah the Son of Yezid's Speech, and the People very much offended at Ibrahim's Behaviour; there were high Words on both sides till Abdollah the Governour came down; he, being informed that Ibrahim had threatened to write to Abdollah the Son of Zobeir, and acquaint him with the Contents of his smooth Speech to the Cufians, made haste to pay him a Visit, and swore that he meant nothing by it but only to appease the People, and keep the Peace to prevent their doing any further mischief; with which Excuse Ibrahim was very well satisfied. And now Solyman and his Party pulled off the Mask, and appeared barefaced openly in Arms.

Merwàn I. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

Merwân I. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

At this time the Separists, who had before joined Abdollah the Son of Zobeir, and assisted him whilst he was besieged in Meccah, deserted him. The Case was thus: Obeidollah, when Go-

Governour at Baſorah, had been always their implacable Enemy, and exerted his utmoſt to extirpate the whole Generation of them Root and Branch from off the Face of the Earth; diſtreſſed by his unmerciful Perſecution, they took the Opportunity, when Abdollah, the Son of Zobeir, firſt made his Appearance at Meccah, of applying themſelves to him; he, as Matters then ſtood with him, was no leſs glad of their Aſſiſtance than they were of his Protection, and embraced them without any Scrutiny about Principles, or aſking any Queſtions for Conſcience ſake: They afterwards began to ſay to one another, that they had committed an Error in engaging themſelves in a Man's Intereſt whoſe Principles were dubious; and reſolved, before they advanced one ſtep further, to bring him to the Teſt. They had not forgotten how both he and his Father Zobeir had perſecuted them upon the Account of Othman's Death, and they were reſolved to make uſe of it as a Proof of his being in their Intereſt, or the contrary: They came to him accordingly in a body, and told him, That hitherto they had aſſiſted him without any previous Examination of his Principles; now, for ſatisfaction, they deſired to know what he thought of Othman? He underſtood them very well, but ſeeing but few of his Friends about him, he told them, that they were come at an

Merwân I. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29° A. C. 683.

Merwân I. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

unſeaſonable time, when he had rather be at reſt; if they would defer it a little, and return in the Evening, they ſhould have a ſatisfactory Anſwer. In the mean time he gathers together a ſufficient number of Guards, and places them in double Ranks round about his Houſe: At laſt they came, and perceiving how matters ſtood, and what Preparation Abdollah had made for their Reception, did not think fit to come to Blows; but one of them, a Man of a voluble Tongue, eminent for his Eloquence, made a Speech, wherein he briefly recapitulated the moſt conſiderable Diſpenſations of Providence towards them, and the ſeveral Succeſſions of their Caliphs ſince Mahomet, concluding with hard Reflections upon Othman's Adminiſtration, his Partiality in favour of his Relations, and in a word juſtified his being murdered: Abdollah told him, That as to what he had ſaid concerning the Prophet (which was very great) he was not only what he had ſaid, but above it; and what he had ſaid of Abubeker and Omar was juſt enough; but as for Othman, he had more reaſon to know him than any Man alive; that he was ſure he was murdered wrongfully, and that he never wrote that Letter whereof he had been accuſed; and that for his own part, he ſhould be a Friend of Othman's both in this World and that to come, and a Friend of his Friends, and an Enemy of his his Enemies. To this they anſwered, God is clear of thee, thou Enemy of God! which he ecchoed back again, God is clear of you, ye Enemies of God! Upon this they parted; but as for Abdollah, he could the more eaſily part with them, becauſe he had already ſerved his turn of them: Some of them went to Yemàmah, the reſt to Baſorah; thoſe of them that went to Baſorah began to ſay among themſelves, [5] "Would to "God ſome of our People would go out in the way "of God, for there hath been negligence on our "ſide ſince our Companions went out, and our "Teachers ſtood up in the Earth and were the "Lights of Mankind, and exhorted them to Re- "ligion, and ſober and couragious Men went out "and met the Lord, and became Martyrs main- "tained with God alive." Thus they encouraged one another mutually till they had gathered together a Body of about Three Hundred, juſt about the time that the Baſorians made an Inſurrection againſt Obeidollah, and taking the Advantage of the Hurry of the People they broke open all the Jayls; but when Obeidollah was gone into Syria, and all the Diſturbance was over, they were ſoon routed and driven away from Baſorah.

Merwàn I. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

So many things being tranſacted in ſeveral Parts of the Empire much about the ſame time, it was neceſſary to diſpatch theſe firſt, to clear

[5] MS. Laud. Num. 161. A.

the

Merwân I. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683

the Way for [6] Moktar, that great and terrible ſcourge of the Enemies of Ali's Family; and becauſe he makes ſo conſiderable a figure in this part of our Hiſtory, it will be neceſſary to be a little more particular in the Account of his Affairs. The Sect of Ali had entertained no very favourable Opinion of him ever ſince the time of Haſan in whoſe Service he was reckoned to be too remiſs; but he recovered his eſteem with them when Hoſein ſent Muſlim to Cufah to take the Suffrages of the Cufians, for he not only entertained him in his Houſe, but made uſe of all his Intereſt privately to ſerve him; ſtill making his Appearance in publick againſt Obeidollah's Men, to prevent Suſpicion. Going one Morning to wait upon Obeidollah, Obeidollah aſked him whether he was come with his Men to ſerve Muſlim? Moktar ſaid that he was not, but had been under the Banner of Amrou the Son of Horith, and ſtaid with him all Night, which Amrou confirmed; but this not ſatisfying Obeidollah, who had good Intelligence of his ſecret Practices, he ſtruck him over the Face with his Stick, and daſhed one of his Eyes all to pieces, and ſent him immediately to Priſon, where he was detained till after Hoſein's Death; at which time finding means to make proper Application to Yezid the Caliph, he was ſet at liberty by his [6] Theophanes calls him Μοχτὰς.

expreſs

expreſs command: Obeidollah knew that it was his Intereſt not to let him go, but was forced to obey the Caliph, and told Almoktar that he allowed him Three Days, after which if he took him he was under no Obligation. Merwàn I. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

Moktar made the beſt of his way to that part of Arabia called Hejaz (which is generally taken by our Geographers to be Arabia Petræa) and meeting with a Friend, who aſked him what his Eye ailed, he anſwered, The Son of a Whore made it ſo; but God kill me if I do not cut him all to pieces. His Friend wondered what he meant, there being no Probability of its ever being in his power, and Mochtar enquired of him concerning Abdollah the Son of Zobeir. He anſwered him, That he had made Meccah the Place of his Refuge; to which Mochtar anſwered, I do not believe that he can make any thing of it, but when you ſee it come to paſs, when you ſee Mochtar up at the Head of his Men to revenge the Death of Hoſein, then, by thy Lord, I will kill, upon the account of his Murder, as many as were killed upon the account of the Blood of John the Son of Zacharias, upon whom be Peace.

For the clearing of which Paſſage it muſt be underſtood, that the Mahometans entertain a profound Veneration for the Memory of St. John Baptiſt, upon the account of the honourable mention mention made of him in the third Chapter of the Alcoran, in these words, [6] Then prayed Zachariah to his Lord, and said, My Lord, give me from thee a good Progeny, for thou art the hearer of Prayers: And the Angels called to him as he stood praying in the Oratory, God sends thee the good News of John, who shall confirm the truth of the Word from God, and shall be a great Person, Chast, a Prophet, and one of the Just, or rather, and one of the just Prophets.

Merwân I. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

[7] Which Hosein Waês Paraphrases in these Words. "John the Baptist, your Son, shall "publish and give Authority to the Faith in the "Messias Jesus the Son of Mary, who is the "Word of God, or the Word proceeding from "God; for he shall be the first who shall be-"lieve in him. He shall become Chief and "High-Priest by his Knowledge, by the Auste-"rity of his Life, and by the Sweetness of his "Behaviour, which are Three Qualities requi-"site to make a Person an Imàm or High-Priest "of the Law of God. He shall abstain from "having any thing to do with Women, and "from all the Pleasures of Sense, and, in short, "he shall be a Prophet descended from good "Men such as his Father Zachariah and his "Grandfather Saleh had been before him, teach-"ing Men the Ways of Justice and Salvation."

[6] Alcoran. Chap. 3. Verse 33. [7] D'Herbelot, in Jahia.

They

They have a Tradition of St. John Baptiſt having been beheaded by the Command of a King of Judæa, the Blood which flowed from his Body could not be ſtanched till it was avenged by a very great Deſolation which God ſent upon the People of the Jews; and this is what was meant by Almochtar. Merwàn I. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

When they parted, Almochtar went to Meccah juſt at that time when Abdollah began to ſet up himſelf for the Caliphate, and told him that all things about Cufah were in the utmoſt confuſion; then, whiſpering him, he ſaid that he was come to proffer him his Allegiance, if he would make him eaſie. I do not find what Anſwer he received, nor whether or no he received any at all: [2] From that time he was ſeen no more at Meccah till about a Twelve-month after, when, as Abbàs the Son of Sahel and Abdollah happened to be talking concerning him he appeared on one ſide of the Temple: Abbas followed him, to find out which way he ſtood inclined, and aſked him if he had been all that while in Thayef, (for he had ſeen him there himſelf) he told him in Thayef and in other Places, but ſeemed to make a Secret of his Buſineſs; Abbas told him that he was very private, according to the Cuſtom of the Cufians; that all the noble Families of the Arabians had ſent ſome

[2] MS. Laud. Num. 161. A.

great

Merwân I. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

great Man or other to offer their Allegiance to Abdollah, and that it would be very ſtrange if he ſhould be ſingular and refuſe it: Almóchtar anſwered, that he came about it the Year before, but receiving no ſatisfactory Anfwer, it looked as if Abdollah had no Occaſion for his Service; and ſince he found himſelf ſlighted he thought Abdollah had more Occaſion for him than he had for Abdollah: At laſt Abbas prevailed upon him ſo far that he ſaid he would do it after he had ſaid the laſt Evening Prayer: They appointed to meet at the Stone, and Abbas in the mean time rejoiced the Heart of Abdollah with the News. When they were admitted into Abdollah's Houſe, Almochtar told him, that he expected if he gave him his Allegiance to have Acceſs to him upon all Occaſions before any other Perſon, and that he ſhould make uſe of him in his moſt weighty Affairs; Abdollah would have had him been content with being governed, according to the Book of God and the Tradition; Almochtar anſwered, That that was no more privilege than what the fartheſt Man alive enjoyed, and that he would never come in upon any other Terms than what he had propoſed; Abdollah's Affairs being as yet in an unſettled Condition it was thought moſt adviſable to indulge him in his Humour; ſo he continued with Abdollah during the Siege of Meccah and fought bravely in the Defence of it; till, as we have related before, upon the News of Yezid's Death the Siege was raiſed, and the Army returned into Syria. Merwân I. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug 29. A. C. 683.

fought

Almochtar continued with Abdollah five Months and ſome Days after the Death of Yezid, but perceiving that Abdollah was ſtill ſhy of him, and did not employ him in any conſiderable Poſt, nor make any great uſe of him in his Counſels, he always was very diligent in enquiring after the Condition of the Cufians, and Ali's Friends on that ſide of the Country; at laſt one informed him, that there was only a Party ſupported by ſome Provincialiſts that were in the Intereſt of Abdollah; and as for the Friends of Ali's Family, they wanted nothing but a Man of their own Opinion, to head them in order to conſume the whole Earth. Almochtar ſwore that he was their Man, and that by their Aſſiſtance he would beat down [1] all haughty Tyrants. The other told him, that for his further Satisfaction, that he might not be deceived, they had gone ſo far already as to ſet one over them, but a Perſon of ſmall Experience; Almochtar ſaid, he did not intend to call them to Sedition, but to the right way, and to the Church, and forthwith ſet forth for Cufah. All the way he went, he made it his buſineſs to pay

[1] It is an Expreſſion uſed in the Alcoran.

Merwán I. An. Heg. 64. cœpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

pay his Reſpects to the Congregations of the ſeveral Moſques, and ſay his Prayers among them, and harangue them, aſſuring them of Succeſs and Victory, and a ſpeedy Deliverance from all their Grievances: When he came to Cufah he called the Sect together, and told them that he was come "from the [8] Mine of Excel-"lency, the Imàm that directs the right way; "who commanded Medicines to be applied, and "the Veil to be removed, and the Perfection of "gracious Works, and the killing of their Ene-"mies. He then repreſented to them the Incapa-"city of Solyman for ſuch an Undertaking, as being "altogether unexperienced in War, and one that "would only deſtroy both them and himſelf:" This he inculcated ſo frequently, that he perſuaded a great many of the Sect into his Intereſt, who began every Day to favour him more and more in their common Diſcourſe, and magnify his Merit, and promiſe themſelves great things from him. But notwithſtanding all this, Solyman's Intereſt was ſtill Superior to any amongſt the Sect, as being the moſt Ancient, and of the greateſt Authority: He was reſolved to go forwards according to his Appointment, with what Forces he had, expecting to be joined by a great Army of the Sect at Nochàilah. Almochtar

[8] That was Mohammed Ebn Haniphiyah, Ali's Son, then Reſident at Meccah.

ſtaid

ſtaid behind, waiting for an account of Solyman's Succeſs, not doubting in the leaſt, but that if he ſhould miſcarry the ſole Command of the Sect would fall inevitably into his Hands, He was ſuſpected of having a ſecret Deſign of ſeizing the Province, upon which account ſome of Solyman's Party ſurrounded his Houſe, and having ſurprized him, would have perſuaded the Governour to have bound him, and made him walk Barefoot to Priſon: The Governour anſwered, that he would never do ſo to a Man that had not declared himſelf an Enemy, but was only taken up upon Suſpicion. Then they would have had him put in Irons, but the Governour anſwered, that the Priſon was reſtraint enough; whither he was conveyed upon a Mule, and where for a while we muſt leave him. Merwân I. An. Heg. 64. cæpit Aug. 29. A. C. 683.

We return now to Solyman and his Penitents, for ſo they were called that confederated under him to revenge the Death of Hoſein, becauſe of their Sorrow for their former Neglect of him in his Extremity. They ſet out according to their Agreement to meet at their general Rendezvous at Nochâilah, a Place not very far diſtant from Cufah in the New Moon of the latter Rebiyah. When he came there and had taken a View of the Camp, he was very much concerned at the ſmallneſs of the Number, and diſpatched two Horſemen Poſt to Cufah, with Orders to cry round about the Streets and in the great Moſque, Vengeance for Hoſein; this alarmed the People, and amongſt the reſt there was an Arabian married to the greateſt Beauty of her Time whom he doated upon to an Exceſs: As ſoon as he heard that Proclamation he neither anſwered them one Word, nor went out to them, but put on his Cloaths in great Haſte and called for his Arms and his Horſe. His Wife aſked him if he was poſſeſſed, he anſwered, By God no! but I have heard God's Herald calling for Revenge for the Blood of that Man [Hoſein] and I will anſwer him, and I will die for him, or God ſhall diſpoſe of me as he pleaſes. To whom, ſaid ſhe, do you leave this Child of yours? To God, ſaid he, who hath no Partner: O God! I commend to thee my Family and my Child! O God preſerve me in them. This ſaid, he followed them, and left her to bewail him.

Merwân I. An. Heg. 65. cœpit Aug. 17. A. C. 684.

[3] Thoſe that were gathered together in the Street went to the great Moſque, where they found a great many People after the laſt Evening Prayer, and repeating the ſame Cry, another, a Perſon of Diſtinction, armed himſelf and called for his Horſe; his Daughter aſking him the Reaſon of it, he anſwered, Child thy Father flies from his Sin to his God! Then calling his neareſt Relations together he took his Leave,

[3] MS. Laud. Num. 161. A.

and

and arrived at Solyman's Camp the next Morning. They next looked over the Rolls to see how many had given their Hands at first, and found them sixteen Thousand, whereof there were not above four Thousand present: One said that Almochtar had drawn off two Thousand; so that according to that Account there still remained ten Thousand guilty of Perjury. At last Mosábbib told Solyman, that they who did not come out of an hearty Intent would do him no Service. Solyman and several others of the chief Men made Speeches to that small Handful they had, telling them, That it was not this World they fought for, that they had neither Silver nor Gold, but were going to expose themselves to the Edges of Swords and the Points of Spears. To which the People answered all around, It is not this World that we seek, neither did we come out for the Sake of it. Then they deliberated about the most proper Method of carrying on their Design; one proposed the marching directly into Syria to be revenged on Obeidollah; another would have them go and destroy all that had a hand in his Death at Cufah, where there were a great many of the Chiefs of the Tribes and several other leading Men. Solyman did by no means approve of this last Advice, but said, That they ought to take Vengeance upon that individual Person that had Meawàn I. An. Heg. 65. cœpit Aug. 17. A. C. 684.

Merwàn I. An. Heg. 65. cœpit Aug. 17. A. C. 684.

beſet him with armed Men, and ſaid to him, you ſhall have no Protection from me, unleſs you ſurrender your ſelf entirely to my Diſpoſal; [7] that wicked Wretch, the Son of that wicked Wretch is your Object! Beſides he did not think it proper by any means to begin a Maſſacre in their own Province, which would alienate their Friends and exaſperate the People to ſee their Fathers and Brethren and near Relations murdered before their Faces; wherefore he adviſed them to leave that Matter to be conſidered afterwards, if it ſhould pleaſe God to grant them a ſafe Return out of Syria.

In the mean time Ibrahim, (who, as we have mentioned before, was ſent from Abdollah the Son of Zobeir to gather the Tribute) and Abdollah the Son of Yezid, the Governour of Cufah, being informed of Solyman's Expedition, entertained ſome thoughts of joyning Forces with him: They conceived it was both plauſible and practicable enough to ſecure themſelves in that part of the Country, under the pretence of revenging the Death of Hoſein; beſides that Obeidollah's Cruelty had raiſed the greateſt Averſion againſt him imaginable, in all the Provinces that had been under his juriſdiction. They went both to Solyman, and perſuaded him to ſtay till they could raiſe Forces to aſſiſt him, or elſe to abide where he was, till Obeidolláh ſhould come within their Bounds, which they had very good Reaſon to think would not be long, after the Alarm was taken in Syria. This not prevailing, Ibraham would have perſuaded him at leaſt to ſtay till he could furniſh him with ſome Money (no leſs than the Tribute of the whole Province.) The Anſwer to this laſt Propoſal was, that their going out was not for this World. Thus the Conference broke off, and Solyman continued his March into Syria, and Ibrahim and the Son of Yezid returned back to Cufah. Merwàn I. An. Heg. 65. cœpit Aug. 17. A. C. 684.

[7] That is, Obeidollah the Son of Ziyàd.

abide

Obeidollah was not idle all this while, but was upon his March towards them. Solyman's Men perceiving that their Friends of Madayen and Baſorah did not join them according to Promiſe began to murmur: And notwithſtanding his Endeavours to pacify them, they deſerted; ſo that when he Muſtered them at Ekſàs, upon the Banks of the Euphrates, there were a Thouſand of them wanting: Solyman ſaid to the reſt, It is a good Riddance; for if they had ſtaid they would have been only a Burthen to you; The Lord did not approve of their going out, and therefore he hath withdrawn them, and held them back for the better, wherefore praiſe ye your Lord.

Marching all Night they came the next Morning to Hoſein's burying Place, where they ſtaid a Night and a Day, which they ſpent in praying for him, and begging his Pardon. When they first came to his Tomb, they all cried out with one Voice, and wept, and wished that they had been Partners with him in his Death: There never was seen a greater Day of Weeping than that. Solyman said, O God! be merciful to Hosein the Martyr, the Son of the Martyr; The Guide, the Son of the Guide; the Righteous, the Son of the Righteous! O God! we call thee to Witness, that we are in their Profession of Religion, and in their way, and that we are Enemies of those that killed them, and Friends of those loved them. Another Account (not contradictory to the former) says, that when they drew near to Hosein's Tomb they cried out unanimously, O Lord! we have deceived the Son of the Daughter of our Prophet; forgive us what is past, and repent towards us, for thou art the Repenter, the Merciful! Have Mercy upon Hosein and his Followers, the righteous Martyrs! And we call thee to Witness, O Lord! that we are the very same sort of Men with those that were killed for his sake, and if thou dost not forgive him to us we must be sufferers. They did not move till the Morning after, but continued bewailing him and his Friends at his Sepulchre, the sight of which renewed their Sorrow. Nay when Solyman commanded them to march, there was never a Man of them would stir till he had first stood over Hosein's Tomb, and begged his Pardon: One that was present there swears that he never saw such crowding and pressing about the Black Stone. From thence they marched to Hesâsah, from Hesâsah to Alámbar, from Alámbar to Sodûd, and from Sodûd to Kayyàrah. Merwàn I. An. Heg. 65. cœpit. Aug. 17. A. C. 684.

Merwân I. An. Heg. 65. cœpit Aug. 17. A. C. 684.

and

Whilst they were at Kayyàrah, Abdollah the Son of Yézid, the Governour of Cufah, sent them a Friendly Letter, admonishing them of the desperateness of their Undertaking, in encountring such a Multitude as they must expect to meet, with such an handful; assuring them of his being in the same Interest with them, and desiring them to return: He concluded thus, "Do not "set at nought my Advice, nor contradict my [1] "Command; come as soon as my Letter is "read to you: God turn your Faces towards "his Obedience, and your Backs to the rebell-"ing against him." When the Letter was read, and the People had asked Solyman's Advice, he told them that he saw no reason for going back, that they were never like to be nearer the two [2] Hosein's than now, and that the meaning of their persuading them to return was, that they might assist Abdollah the Son of Zobeir, which he reckoned to be Erroneous; but if they died

[1] Arab. Amri. It doth not always signify strictly a Command, because that supposes Superiority, but any thing that one Friend desireth of another. [2] Hasan and Hosein, as we have observed before.

Merwàn I. An. Heg. 65. cœpit Aug. 17. A. C. 683.

now, they ſhould die in a ſtate of Repentance from their Sins. At laſt he came to Hait, from whence he wrote an Anſwer to the Governour of Cufah, wherein he gave him Thanks for his kind Letter, but told him that his Men could not accept of his Invitation; that they were true Penitents, and reſolved to go forwards and leave the Succeſs to God. The Governour as ſoon as he received the Letter ſaid, that they were reſolved to die, and that would be the next News of them. From Hait they went to Karkiſia, from thence to Ainwérdah. They deſigned to depoſe both the Caliphs, viz. [a] Abdolmelik the Son of Merwan, and Abdollah the Son of Zobeir, and reſtore the Government to the Family of the Prophet. Not to enter into a long detail of the tedious Particulars of their March and Engagement, in ſhort Obeidollah met them with twenty Thouſand Men, and cut them all to Pieces.

Not long after, in the Month Ramadàn, the Chaliph Merwàn died. We muſt here remem-

[a] There muſt be a Miſtake here: For this Action was before Merwan's Death. See Elmakin. Solyman and his Penitents met at Nochailah on the new Moon of the latter Rebiyah. Merwàn died in the Month of Ramadan; ſo that unleſs we can ſuppoſe them to have been above five Months in their March, (which would not take them ſo many Weeks) this Action muſt have been over before the Death of Merwàn, therefore inſtead of Abdolmelick, I read Merwàn.

ber,

ber, that after Moawiyah's Deceaſe Merwân was choſen Chaliph upon this Condition, that Caled the Son of Yezid ſhould ſucceed him, excluding his own Children, and that Caled had refuſed to take the Government upon himſelf becauſe he was ſo very young; and that to ſecure the Succeſſion to Caled he married Yezid's Widow, who was Caled's Mother. Merwàn I. An. Heg. 65 cœpit Aug. 17. A. C. 684.

However afterwards, Merwàn having altered his Mind, was deſirous to have the Succeſſion paſs to his own Children excluſive of Caled, and accordingly cauſed his eldeſt Son Abdòlmélik to be proclaimed his lawful and proper Succeſſor.

Caled, who always hated him, came to him one Day, when there were a great many of the Nobility about him in the Garden, and reviled him after the moſt reproachful manner. This moved the old Man's Choler ſo that he called him Baſtard; Caled went and told his Mother all that had paſſed; the Lady touched to the Quick with this Affront was reſolved to be revenged; but ſaid to Caled, Child, you muſt have a care of ſuch Behaviour, for he will never bear it; let me alone, and I will take Care of him for you; Merwàn coming in ſoon after aſked her if Caled had ſaid any thing concerning him; ſhe told him no, he had more Reſpect for him.

Merwàn did not long ſurvive it, ſome ſay ſhe poiſoned him, others that ſhe laid a Pillow upon his his Face when he was asleep and sat upon it till he was dead, and then told the People that he died on a sudden.

Merwàn I. An. Heg. 65. cœpit Aug. 17. A. C. 684.

Some say his Age was Sixty three, others with more Probability Seventy one. He reigned Two Hundred and Ninety eight Days.

He was called Ebn Tarid, The Son of the Expelled; because Mahomet had banished his Father Hakem for divulging a Secret. He continued in his Exile during the Reigns of Abubeker and Omar, and the recalling him was objected to Othman as one of his greatest Crimes, it being reversing the Sentence of the Prophet; though Othman, mild and good-natured as he was, thought that since the Cause of his Banishment, and all the bad Effects of it that could possibly happen, were at an end, the Punishment ought to cease also.

The

The Fifth Chaliph of the Houſe of Ommiyah, (being the Eleventh from MAHOMET.)

ABDOLMELICK,

The Son of MERWAN.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 65. cœpit Aug. 17. A. C. 684.

[a] ON the third Day of the Month Ramadan in the ſixty fifth Year of the Hegirah, Abdolmélick the Son of Merwàn was inaugurated Chaliph, and ſucceeded his Father in the Government of Syria and Ægypt: It is reported, that when the News was firſt brought to him he was ſitting with the Alcoran in his Lap; whereupon he folded it up and laid it aſide, and ſaid, I muſt take my Leave of thee now.

Abdollah ſtill holding it out againſt him at Meccah, he was not willing the People ſhould go thither on Pilgrimage, and for that Reaſon ſent and enlarged the Temple of Jeruſalem ſo as to take the [5] Stone into the Body of the Church, and the People began to make their Pilgrimages thither.

[a] Abu'lpheda. [5] See Vol. I. at the Siege of Jeruſalem. MS. Laud. Numb. 161. A.

All

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 66. cœpit Aug. 7. A. C. 685.

All this while Almochtàr was making the beſt Uſe of his Time in order to compaſs his Deſigns: During his Impriſonment he had found Means to keep up his Correſpondence with the Sect; Letters were conveyed to him in the lining of a Cap: He was ſoon informed of Solyman's Fate, and thought it a proper Time to exert himſelf. Abdollah the Son of Zobéir being ſtill in Arms at Meccah againſt Abdolmélick the new Chaliph, Ibrahim the Son of Aſhtar was courted by the Sect, who anſwered, That he would join with them if they would be under his Command; but they told them that that was impracticable becauſe they were already pre-engaged to Almochtar, who, at a Meeting where Ibrahim was preſent, producing a Letter from Almohdi the Son of Mahomet, the Son of Ali, who was the Head of the Sect in a lineal Succeſſion, Ibrahim gave him his Hand without any more to do, and Almochtar took upon him the ſole Command of the Forces. [4] Not only ſo, but a great many of them inaugurated him Chaliph upon theſe Terms, That he ſhould govern according to the Contents of the Book of God and the Tradition of his Apoſtle, and deſtroy the Murderers of Hoſein and the Family. The firſt he attempted to ſeize was Shamer, whom he overcame and killed. The next was

[4] Abu'lpheda.

Caula,

Caula, who carried Hoſein's Head to Obeidollah, him he beſieged in his Houſe, and killed him and burnt him. Afterwards he killed Amer who commanded the Army that killed Hoſein, and gave Orders that the Horſe ſhould trample over his Back and Breaſt; he killed his Son too, and ſent both their Heads to Mohammed ben Hanifiyah. The Sect were afraid leſt he ſhould have pardoned Ali the Son of Hathem, and begged of him to let them kill him; he told them they might diſpoſe of him as they thought fit. They took him and bound him, ſaying, You ſtripped the Son of Ali before he was dead, and we will ſtrip you alive; and you made a Mark of him, and we will make one of you; then they let fly a Shower of Arrows at him, which ſtuck ſo thick over all Parts of his Body that he looked like a Porcupine. In ſhort, Almochtar found Means to ſurprize them whenſoever he could get any Information where they were, and deſtroyed them with variety of Deaths.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 66. cœpit Aug. 7. A.C. 685.

[2] Abdolmélick had about this Time ſent an Army againſt Abdollah the Son of Zobéir, who was at Medinah; Almochtar, who had two ſuch powerful Enemies to deal withal, was reſolved to try if he could get rid of one of them firſt; he endeavoured to overreach Abdollah by ſend-

[2] MS. Laud. Num. 161. A.

ing

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 66. cœpit Aug. 7. A. C. 685.

ing an Army pretendtedly to his Assistance upon the following Occasion.

Abdolmélick having sent an Army out of Syria towards Iràk, Almochtàr was afraid lest they should not only fall upon him on that Side, but that he should at the same time be distressed by Abdollah's Brother Musab, from Basorah on the other. Wherefore he wrote a deceitful Letter to Abdollah, wherein he told him, that being informed that Abdolmélick the Son of Merwàn had sent an Army against him, he would willingly come to his Assistance with a competent Force. Abdollah answered him, That if he was once assured of the Sincerity of his Allegiance he might come; and in order to give him Satisfaction in that Article he desired him to take the Votes of his Men for him, and when he had received them he should believe him, and not send any more Forces into his Country; and that in the mean time he should send his intended Assistance with all possible Speed against Abdolmélick's Army that lay at Dilkóra; upon this Almochtar called Serjabil the Son of Wars to him, and dispatched him with about 3000 Men, most of them Slaves, for there were not above seven Hundred Arabs amongst them, and bad him march directly to Medinah and write to him from thence for further Orders. Almochtar's Design was, as soon as they came to Medinah, to send an Emir

to

to command them, whilſt Serjabil ſhould go and beſiege Abdollah in Meccah. But Abdollah, who had no great Reaſon to put Confidence in Almochtar, did not intend to ſuffer himſelf to be ſurprized, eſpecially ſince Almochtar had not given him the Security he expected; wherefore he ſent Abbas, the Son of Sahel, from Meccah to Medinah with two Thouſand Men, ordering him, if he found the Army in his Intereſt to receive them; if otherwiſe, to uſe the beſt of his Endeavour to deſtroy them. When Abbàs met Serjabil he found his Men all in Order of Battel, the Horſe all on the Right, and Serjabil himſelf marching before the Foot; Abbàs his Men were in no Order at all. After they had ſaluted one another, Abbàs took Serjabil aſide, and aſked him if he did not own himſelf to be Abdollah's Subject? To which Queſtion when Serjabil had anſwered in the Affirmative, Abbàs bad him march along with him to Dilkóra; Serjabil told him, that he had received no ſuch Orders from his Maſter, but only to march directly to Medinah: Abbàs told him, that his Maſter took it for granted that he was come out for no other Purpoſe but to go to Dilkóra; the other ſtill inſiſted that his Orders were for Medinah: Abbàs perceiving how Matters ſtood with him, concealed his Suſpicion of him, and told him he was in the right to obey his Orders, he might do

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 66. cœpit Aug. 7. A. C. 685.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 66. cæpit Aug. 7. A. C. 685.

do as he thought fit, but for his own Part he must go to Dilkóra. Serjabil and his Men were almost famished for want of Provision in their long March; Abbas made Serjabil a Present of a fat Sheep which he had by him ready killed, and sent a Sheep to every ten of his Men: The Sharpness of their Hunger soon set them on Work; they left their Order and ran backwards and forwards for Water, and whatsoever else was necessary for the dressing their Victuals: Abbàs in the mean time took about a Thousand of his best Men and came up to their Tents: Serjabil perceiving what Danger he was in, cried out to his Men to come to his Assistance, but there were scarce an hundred of them got together when Abbàs was come up close to him, crying out, O Troop of God! come out and fight with these Confederates of the Devil; you are in the right Way, but they are perjured Villains! They fought but a very little while before Serjabil and about Threescore and ten of his Guard were killed; whereupon Abbàs held up a Flag of Quarter, which they readily ran to, except three Hundred who were all afterwards put to the Sword. [1] Abbàs let about two Hundred of them go. When Almochtar heard the News he wrote to Mohammed the Son of Haniphiyah, acquainting him with the Disaster, and proffering him to send a powerful Army to his Assistance, if he would please to accept of it: Mohammed answered him that he was very well assured of the Sincerity of his Zeal for his Service; that if he had thought fit to make use of Arms, he should not have wanted Assistance; but that he was resolved to bear with Patience, and leave the Event to God, who was the best Judge. When the Messenger that brought Almochtar's Letter took his leave, Mohammed said to him, Bid Almochtar fear God, and abstain from shedding Blood: The Messenger asked him if he would not write that to him, Mohammed answered, "I have already commanded him to obey the great and mighty "God; and the Obedience of God consists in "the doing all that is Good, and the abstaining "from all Evil." When Almochtar received the Letter he gave it another turn, and said to the People, I am commanded to do that which is just, and reject Infidelity and Perfidiousness.

[1] MS. Laud. Num. 161. A.

erful

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 66. cœpit Aug. 7. A. C. 685.

This same Year the Hoseinians went to Meccah, and performed a Pilgrimage there, under Abu Abdollah Aljódali, upon this occasion. Though Mohammed the Son of Haniphiyah, and all the rest of Ali's Family, behaved themselves very inoffensively at Meccah, and were so far from making any Disturbance, that they always persuaded their Friends to Peace, who were ready to hazard their Lives in their Service, yet

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 66. cæpit Aug. 7. A. C. 685.

Abdollah eaſily found by Experience, that it would be impoſſible for him to ſucceed ſo long as they were alive, and refuſed the Oath of Allegiance. For though they did not ſtir themſelves, they had a very ſtrong Party; and a great many other diſaffected Perſons made uſe of the pretence of revenging the Death of Hoſein. He therefore reſolved to make an end of it all at once, and ſeized Mohammed and his Family, and ſeventeen of the principal Cufians, and Impriſoned them in the Zemzem, and ſet a Guard over them, and fixed them a time, in which he threatened them, if they did not come in he would put them to Death, and burn them to Aſhes. The Zemzem is the Name of a Pit at Meccah which the Muſlemans ſay was made out of that Spring which God cauſed to appear in favour of Hagar and Iſhmael, whom Abraham had turned out of his Houſe, and obliged to retire into Arabia; concerning this Well they relate a great many ſtrange things not proper to be inſerted in this place. Here they were ſhut up, but (ſays my Author) God whoſe Name be magnified and glorified, gave to them not to come in, though he ſhould execute all his Threats upon them. Whilſt they were in this Condition, they found means to write to Almochtar and acquaint him with their Circumſtances, deſiring alſo of the Cufians not to deſert them, them, as they did Hoſein and his Family. When he received the Letter, he called the People together, and having read the Letter ſaid, This is from your Guide, and the pureſt of the Family of the Houſe of your Prophet, upon whom be Peace; they are left ſhut up like Sheep expecting to be killed and burnt; but [5] I ſhall give them ſufficient Aſſiſtance, and ſend Horſe after Horſe, as the Streams of Water follow one another. Then he ſent Abu Abdollah Aljódali with Threeſcore and ten Troopers, all Men of approved Valour. After him a ſecond with four Hundred. Then a third with one Hundred. A fourth with one Hundred. A fifth with Forty. And laſt of all a ſixth with forty more. In all, ſeven Hundred and fifty. Theſe went out at ſeveral times one after the other, and Abu Abdollah their Chief made a halt by the way, till he was joined by the two Companies, conſiſting of Forty each, and with this one Hundred and Fifty made haſte to the Temple of Meccah, crying out Vengeance for Hoſein. A laſt they went to the Zemzem, where they arrived in very good time, for Abdollah had got the Wood ready to burn his Priſoners, and there remained but two Days of the appointed time: They beat off the Guard, and broke open the the Zemzem, and begged of Mohammed to give them leave to uſe their liberty with the Enemy of God, Abdollah the Son of Zobeir; but Mohammed anſwered that he would not [6] allow any fighting in the Sacred Place of the moſt high God. Abdollah ſaid, Do you think I will diſmiſs them unleſs they ſwear to me? nay and you ſhall ſwear too. Abu Abdollah anſwered, By the Lord of this Sacred Place thou ſhalt let them go, or we will cut thee to Pieces. Abdollah deſpiſing the Smallneſs of their Number, ſwore that if he ſhould give his Men leave it would not be an Hour's time before all their Heads were off. Mohammed the Son of Haniphiyah kept back his Friends, and would not let them fight, and Abdollah began to cool, when he ſaw another Captain come up with one Hundred Men, and a Second with the like Number; then two Hundred more in a Body with the Money; who went all to the Temple and cried out Allah Acbar, Vengeance for the Death of Hoſein. When Abdollah ſaw them he was afraid of them. They took him Priſoner, and intreated Mohammed to give them leave to diſpoſe of him as they thought fit, but he would not ſuffer them. The Money which they brought was diſtributed amongſt four Thouſand of Ali's Friends, and the whole Buſineſs through the exceeding Gentleneſs of Mohammed's Temper was amicably compromiſed.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 66. cœpit Aug. 7. A. C. 685.

[5] Here the Arabick is ſomething obſcure.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 66. cœpit Aug. 7. A.C. 685.

[6] It is prohibited in the Alcoran, Ch. 2. ver. 187.

Before

Before Merwan's Death, Obeidollah was sent towards Cufah with an Army, and had leave to Plunder it for three Days.[6] Against him was sent Yezid the Son of Ares, worthy to be mentioned upon the account of his heroick Courage and Presence of Mind; for when Death appeared in his Face, and he was forced to be held upon his Ass on both sides, he appointed three Generals to command the Army during the Fight successively, if there should be occasion for them. Obeidollah never reached so far as Cufah; and now in the first Month of the sixty seventh Year, Almochtàr found himself at leisure to send his Forces against him: There was one thing very remarkable in his Preparation; he made a Throne, and pretended that there was something mysterious in it, telling the People, That it was of the same use to them that the Ark was to the Children of Israel; and accordingly in this Expedition against Obeidollah, it was carried upon a Mule on purpose into the Battel: The Prayer that they said at this Ark was, O God! grant us to live long in thy Obedience, and help us and do not forget us, but protect us. And the People answered Amen, Amen. Almochtàr's General was Ibrahim the Son of Ashtar; after a sharp Engagement, Obeidollah's Forces were beaten and himself killed in the Camp. Ibrahim cut off his Head and burnt his Body. The Number of the Son of Ziyàd's Men that were drowned in the Flight, was greater than that which was ſlain in the Field. His Head with ſome others were ſent to Almochtar.[3] Thus God revenged the Death of Hoſein by the means of Almochtar, though Almochtar had no good deſign in it. [4] After the Succeſs of this Battel, the People had ſuch a Reverence for this Ark, that they almoſt Idolized it.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 67. cœpit Jul. 27. A. C. 686.

[6] MS. Laud. Num. 161. A. Abulpheda.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 67. cœpit Jul. 27. A. C. 686.

This Year, Abdollah ſent his Brother Muſab to govern Baſorah: Almochtàr was ſole Maſter of Cufah, where he perſecuted all that he could lay his Hands on, who were not of Hoſein's Party. Múſaab rode muffled to Baſorah, and when he alighted at the Temple, and went up into the Pulpit, the People cried out Emìr, Emìr, that is, a Governour, a Governour. He bad Hàreth his Predeceſſor give place, which he did, ſitting one Step below him. Then having according to cuſtom firſt praiſed God he began with theſe Words of the [5] Twenty eighth Chapter of the Alcoran; We relate to thee, the Hiſtory of Moſes and Pharaoh with truth, for [the ſatisfaction of] thoſe that believe; till he came to theſe Words, and was of them that defile the

[3] Abulpheda. [4] MS. Laud. Num. 161. A. [5] Alcoran, Ch. xxviii.

Earth;

Earth; and [9] pointed with his Hand towards Syria: And when he came at these Words, Who were weakened in the Earth, and we shall make them Rulers, and make them Heirs: Pointing towards Hejaz or Arabia Petræa: And at these Words, And we shewed Pharaoh and Haman, and their Armies what they most feared, he pointed again towards Syria. Then he said to the Basorians, "I hear that you use to give Names "to your Emirs; I have named my self Hejaz, "that is Arabia.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 67. cœpit Jul. 27. A. C. 686.

Soon after one Shebet came to Basorah, upon a crop-eared bob-tailed Mule, with his Cloaths rent, crying out as loud as he could, Ya gautha, Ya gautha, Help! Help! As soon as they had described the manner of his Appearance to Músab, he said he was sure it must be Shebet, for no body else would do so but him, and ordered them to give him Admission. He came with a heavy Complaint, seconded by a great many of the chief Men of Cufah, who represented the great Disorders committed there, and their sufferings under the Administration of Almochtar; particularly an Insurrection of their Slaves against them, begging his Assistance, and persuading him earnestly to march with an Army against [9] When he pointed towards Syria he meant Abdolmélick whom he compares to Pharaoh and Haman; and when he pointed towards Arabia he meant his Brother Abdollah.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 67. cœpit Jul. 27. A. C. 686.

Almochtar. He was very much inclined to hearken to their Propoſal, but was reſolved not to ſtir till Almohàlleb his Lieutenant over Perſia ſhould come to his Aſſiſtance. He wrote to Almohalleb who made no great haſte, not very much approving this Expedition; but he obeyed the ſecond Summons, and came to him with large Supplies both of Men and Money. They joined their Forces, and marched towards Cufah againſt Almochtar, who was not wanting to his own Defence, but muſtered his Forces, and gave them Battel; after a bloody Fight Almochtar was beaten, and made his Retreat into the royal Caſtle of Cufah. Muſab purſued him and beſieged him there, where he continued behaving himſelf bravely till he was killed, upon which his Men ſurrendered to Múſab at Diſcretion, who put them every Man to the Sword. [1] They were in all ſeven Thouſand. Almochtar was then Sixty ſeven Years old.

[2] Thus died that great Man, who had beaten all the Generals of Yezid, Merwàn and Abdolmélick, all three Caliphs of the Houſe of Ommiyah, and made himſelf Maſter of Cufah, and all Babylonian Iràk, whereof that City was the Capital, and never pardoned any one of thoſe who had declared themſelves Enemies of the Family of the Prophet, nor those whom he could believe to have dipt their Hands in Hosein's Blood, or that of his Relations; so that it is said that he killed near Fifty Thousand Men of those People, without reckoning those who were slain in the Battels which he fought. Abdolmélick An. Heg. 68. cœpit Jul. 17. A. C. 687.

[1] This was in the Month Ramadan An. 67. [2] D'Herbelot in Mokhtàr.

of

3 This Year the Sect of Separatists called Azarakites, sworn Enemies to all established Government, both Temporal and Spiritual, and particularly to the House of Ommiyah, made an Eruption out of Persia, and overran all Irâk, till they came near Cufah, and penetrated as far as Madayen. They committed all manner of Outrages as they went, destroying all they met, ripping open the Women with Child, and exercising the utmost Cruelty without Distinction of Sex or Age. There was a Lady of extraordinary Piety as well as Beauty, which one of them would have spared, to whom another answered, What! Thou art taken with her Beauty thou Enemy of God, and hast denied the Faith! and killed her. Almohalleb then Governour of Mausal and Mesopotamia, mustered his chosen Troops at Basorah, and met them at a Place called Saulâk, where they fought desperately for eight Months, without intermitting one Day. This Year there was such a Famine in Syria, that they could not undertake any Expedition, nor

3 An Heg. 68. cœpit Jul. 17. A. C. 687.

lay

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 69. cœpit Jul. 5. A. C. 688.

lay Siege to any Town, becauſe of the great Scarcity of Proviſion. Abdolmélick Encamped in a Place called Botnàn near to the Territories of Kinniſrin; his Camp was very much incommoded by the great Showers of Rain, however he wintered there, and afterwards returned to Damaſcus.

In the ſixty ninth Year Abdolmélick left Damaſcus to go againſt Múſab the Son of Zobeir, and appointed Amrou the Son of Saïd to take care of Damaſcus, who ſeized upon it for himſelf,[4] which obliged Abdolmélick to return. Others ſay, that when he went out, Amrou the Son of Saïd ſaid to him, You are going to Iràk, and your Father gave me this Government after him, and upon that Conſideration I fought along with him, and you cannot be ignorant of the Pains I took in his Service; wherefore give me this Government after you. Abdolmélick would not hearken to his Propoſal, and Amrou returned to Damaſcus, whither Abdolmélick followed him cloſe. They ſkirmiſhed in the Streets ſeveral Days; at laſt the Women came with their Children crying out, How long will you fight and deſtroy one another for the Government of the Coreiſh? and with much ado parted them; and Articles of Peace were drawn between Amrou and Abdolmélick.

[4] MS. Laud. Num. 161. A.

But

But ſtanding in Competition for a Crown is a Crime never to be forgiven. Three or four Days after Abdolmélick ſent for him; he was in Company with his Wife and two or three Friends, who diſſuaded him from truſting himſelf in his Hands, but he reſolved to venture, and as he went out he ſtumbled: His Wife took the Omen, and repeated her Perſuaſions to ſtay him, but to no Purpoſe. He put on his Sword and took an Hundred Men along with him. When he came thither, he was introduced himſelf, but the Gates were ſhut upon his Men, and no Body permitted to go in along with him but only a little Foot-boy. When he came in Abdolmélick ſpoke very civilly to him, and placed him by him on the Couch where he ſat. After a long Diſcourſe he commanded a Servant to take his Sword off. Amrou expreſſing ſome Unwillingneſs to be diſarmed, What, ſaid Abdolmélick, would you ſit by me with your Sword on? After his Sword was off, Abdolmélick told him, that when he firſt rebelled againſt him he had taken an Oath that if ever he got him into his Power, he would put Fetters upon him; Amrou ſaid, he hoped he would not expoſe him in them to the People; Abdolmélick promiſed him he would not, and at the ſame time pulled the Fetters from under his Cuſhion, which were accordingly put upon his Hands and Feet. Then he Abdolmélick An. Heg. 69. cœpit Jul. 5. A. C. 688.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 69. cœpit Jul. 5. A. C. 688.

he plucked him so violently against the Couch that he beat out two of his Fore-Teeth; after which he told him, that he would still let him go if he thought he would continue in his Duty and keep the Coreish right; But, said he, there never were two Men in one Country engaged in such an Affair as you and I are concerned in but one of them expelled the other. Some say, that when Abdolmélick saw Amrou's Teeth dropt out, as he was taking them in his Fingers, he said, I see your Teeth are out, you will never be reconciled to me again after this; and immediately commanded him to be beheaded.

The Muezzin at the same time called to Evening Prayers. Abdolmélick went out to Prayers, and left the Execution of Amrou to his Brother Abdòlaziz the Son of Merwàn; who standing over him with his Sword, Amrou begged of him for God's Sake not to do that Office himself, but to leave it to some other Person that was not so nearly related, whereupon he threw away his Sword and let him alone. Abdolmélick made but short Prayers, and when he came back, the People observing that Amrou was not long ago with him, acquainted his Brother John with the Matter, who took with him some of his Friends, and a Thousand of Amrou's Slaves, and made an Assault upon Abdolmélick's House,

Houſe, and broke open the Gates, and killed ſeveral of the Guards. In the mean time Abdolmélick wondering to find Amrou alive, aſked Abdolaziz the reaſon of it, who anſwering, that he had forborn him out of Compaſſion: Abdolmélick gave him reproachful Language, and calling for a Javelin he ſtruck Amrou with it, but it not penetrating, he ſeconded his Blow, ſtill to no purpoſe: Then feeling upon his Arm, he perceived he had a Coat of Mail on, at which he laughed and ſaid, Couſin, you come well prepared! Then he called for his Sword, and having commanded Amrou to be thrown upon his Back, he killed him; but was at the ſame time ſeized with ſuch a trembling, that they were forced to take him up, and lay him upon his Couch. All this while John and his Friends were preſſing in, killing and wounding all they met: Wherefore they threw out Amrou's Head, to ſatisfie them that their fighting would be to no purpoſe; and Abdòlaziz the Son of Merwàn, to appeaſe their Rage, threw Money amongſt them in plenty. When they ſaw the Head and the Money, they left fighting and fell to picking it up: But after the heat was over, it is ſaid that Abdolmélick, ſuch was his Covetouſneſs, recalled it all again, and ordered it to be put in the publick Treaſury. John was taken Priſoner and Sentenced to Death, but Abdolaziz begged of his Brother not to kill

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 69. cœpit Jul 5. A. C. 688.

two

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 69. cœpit Jul. 5. A. C. 688.

two of the Ommian Family in one Day; whereupon he was Impriſoned for about a Month or more, after which he adviſed with thoſe about him concerning the putting him and his Friends to Death; he was anſwered that it was better let alone; that they were near Relatitons, and the beſt way would be to give them their liberty and let them go if they would to his Enemy Muſab the Son of Zobeir; that if they were killed in that Service, he would be rid of them by the hands of others; that if they returned and were delivered into his hands again, he might then without incurring any Cenſure deal with them according to his own Diſcretion. This Advice took place, and they went to Muſab the Son of Zobeir. Then Abdolmélick ſent to Amrou's Wife for the Articles of Peace which he had ſigned to her Huſband; ſhe bad the Meſſenger go back, and tell him that ſhe had wrapt them up with him in his Winding-Sheet that he might plead his Cauſe againſt him with them before his Lord. This was an old Grudge between Abdolmélick and his Couſin Amrou begun in their Infancy, occaſioned by an old Woman of their own Family, whom they viſited frequently when they were Boys, and ſhe uſed to dreſs Victuals for them, and give each of them his Diſh by himſelf; and always ordered Matters ſo, as to raiſe Emulation between them, and set them together by the Ears. So that they were either always quarrelling or else so obstinately silent as not to speak one Word. Merwàn before he died had received Information that Amrou had promised himself the Government after his Decease, which made him make the more haste to lay hold of a proper Opportunity of proposing to the Congregation to swear to his Son Abdolmélick and Abdòlaziz after him, with which they readily complied without any Exception. Abdolmélick An. Heg. 69. cœpit Jul. 5. A. C. 688.

and

[3] In the seventieth Year, the Greeks made an incursion into Syria. Abdolmélick, who had Business enough upon his Hands already, between Abdollah the Son of Zobeir in Arabia, and Músab his Brother in Iràk, was not at leisure to go against them, but agreed to pay the Grecian Emperor a Thousand Ducats every Week. This same Year Musab went to Meccah with prodigious Wealth and Cattel, and all manner of Furniture, which he distributed amongst the Arabians. Abdollah the Son of Zobeir went this Year on Pilgrimage.

[4] Abdolmélick, now resolved upon his Expedition into Iràk against Musab, put to Death the principal Persons that had been concerned with Amrou the Son of Saïd: he had sent before him one Caled the Son of Asid, who going

[3] An. Heg. 70. cœpit Jun. 24. A. C. 689. [4] An. Heg. 71. cœpit Jun. 14. A. C. 690.

pri-

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 71. cœpit Jun. 14. A. C. 690.

privately into Baſorah, had begun to form a Party for him: Muſab having received Intelligence of his Proceedings, went to Baſorah in hopes of ſurpriſing him; but he being out of the way, he ſent for the Chief of the Baſorians, and reproached them ſeverally; one with the Meanneſs of his Family; another with ſome ſcandalous Action either of his own, or ſome of his Relations; all of them with ſomething; which Behaviour only exaſperated them, and made them more averſe to his Intereſt. Abdolmélick had in the mean time ſent ſeveral Letters to the leading Men full of large Promiſes: Amongſt the reſt he ſent one to the faithful Ibrahim the Son of Alaſhtar, who delivered it to Múſab ſealed up as it came. The Contents of it were, that if he would come over to his Party he would give him the Lieutenancy of Iràk; Ibrahim told him that he might depend upon it that he had written much to the ſame Purpoſe to all his Friends, and adviſed him to behead them; but Múſab did not approve of that Expedient, becauſe it would create an Averſion in all their Tribes; then Ibrahim adviſed him to Impriſon them or put them in Chains, and ſet ſome body over them, who if he ſhould be Conquered ſhould ſtrike their Heads off, but if he got the Victory he might make a Compliment of them to their Tribes. Múſab anſwered, I have have other Buſineſs to mind; God bleſs Ahubehràn who gave me warning of the Treachery of the Iràkians as if he had foreſeen this very Buſineſs wherein I am now engaged. Abdolmélick An. Heg. 71. cæpit Jul. 14. A. C. 690.

The Syrian Nobility did not approve of Abdolmélick's engaging himſelf in this Expedition; not that they diſliked his Deſign, but they choſe rather that he ſhould ſtay at home with them at Damaſcus, and reduce Iràk by his Generals, rather than expoſe his Perſon to the Hazards of War, fearing, leſt if he ſhould miſcarry, their Government might be in an unſettled Condition, and their Affairs embroiled. To this he anſwered, That no body was fit for that Undertaking but a Man of Senſe, and perhaps he might ſend a Man of Courage that wanted Conduct; that he found himſelf qualified both by his Abilities in War and his Perſonal Courage: That Múſab was of a couragious Family; that his Father Zobeir had been the moſt valiant of the Coreiſh, and that he himſelf was brave, but did not underſtand War, and loved an eaſy Life; and that he had ſome with him that would be againſt him, but for his own Men he could depend upon their Fidelity.

They joined Battle at a Place called Maſken. The Iràkians, according to their Cuſtom, were reſolved to betray Múſab before; for they did not extend to expoſe their Country to be ravaged by a Syrian Army for his Sake. His faithful Friend Ibrahim the Son of Aſhtar gave the firſt Charge, and repulſed [6] Mohammed the Son of Haroun, whom Abdolmélick ſupported with a freſh Company; and at the ſecond Charge Ibrahim was killed. Múſab's General of the Horſe ran away, and a great many of the reſt ſtood by and would not obey his Command: Then he called out O Ibrahim! but there is no Ibrahim for me to Day! It is ſaid, that when Múſab was upon his March againſt Abdolmélick, Abdolmélick aſked if Omer the Son of Abdollah was with him; being anſwered No, for he had made him his Lieutenant of Perſia; he enquired next if Almohalleb was there, they told him No, he was Lieutenant over Mauſal: he aſked the Third Time if Ibàd the Son of Hoſſem was there; being anſwered in the Negative, and aſſured that he had left him behind him at Baſorah, he was exceeding glad and preſaged a certain Victory. For, ſaid he, he will have no body to help him.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 71. cœpit Aug. 14. A. C. 690.

When Múſab perceived his forlorn Condition, he perſuaded his Son Iſa to ride with thoſe Men he had to Meccah, and acquaint his Uncle with the Perfidiouſneſs of the Irakians: But Iſa (who muſt be very young, for his Father was but ſix and thirty) would not leave him, but told him that [7] his Life would do him no good if he ſur-

[6] That is as we pronounce, Mahomet the Son of Aaron.
[7] Yacut Hamàwi.

vided

vived him, and perſuaded him to make his Retreat to Baſorah, where he would find his Friends met together, and from whence he might go to the Governour of the Faithful, meaning his Uncle Abdollah the Son of Zobéir: But Mûſab ſaid, It ſhould never be talked among the Coreiſh that he ran away, nor that he came into the ſacred Temple of Meccah routed, and therefore bad his Son, if he choſe it, come back and fight; he obeyed and died in Battel, and his Father Múſab was killed not long after him. It is ſaid, that during the Engagement Abdolmélick had had ſent to Múſaab and tendered him Quarter; but he anſwered, That ſuch Men as he was did not uſe to go from ſuch a Place as that (meaning the Field of Battel) without either conquering or being conquered. After he was grievouſly wounded with Arrows he was ſtabbed, and his Head cut off and carried to Abdolmélick, who proffered the Bearer a Thouſand Ducats, which he refuſed, ſaying, That he did not kill him in Obedience to him, but to revenge his own Quarrel, and for that Reaſon he would take no Money for bringing the Head. [1] Múſaab was Abdolmélick's intimate Friend before he was Chaliph, but marrying afterwards Sekinah, Hoſein's Daughter, and Ayeſha the Daughter of Telhah he was engaged by thoſe Marriages in Abdolmélick An. Heg. 71. cœpit Jun. 14. A.C. 690.

[1] Abu'lpheda.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 71. cæpit Jun. 14. A. C. 690.

the Intereſt of two Families that were at mortal Enmity with the Houſe of Ommiyah.

[7] As ſoon as this Battel was over Abdalmélick entered into Cufah, and with it took Poſſeſſion of both the Babylonian and Perſian Iràk. As ſoon as he ſignified to the People that he expected they ſhould come in and take the Oaths to him, they came unanimouſly. Soon after he came into the Caſtle he enquired after John the Brother of Amrou whom he had killed; and being informed that he was not far off, he would have had his Men produced him; which they refuſing, unleſs he would firſt promiſe them that he ſhould ſuffer no Harm, he ſeemed to take it ill at firſt that they ſhould pretend to capitulate with him, but at laſt he condeſcended to promiſe them, and John made his Appearance. When he came into his Preſence, Thou vile Wretch! ſaid Abdolmélick, with what Face wilt thou appear before thy Lord, after having [8] depoſed me? With that Face, anſwered John, that he hath created. Then he took the Oath of Allegiance to him, and there was an End of that Buſineſs. He ordered vaſt Sums of Money to be diſtributed among the People, and made a ſplendid Entertainment, to which every body

[7] MS. Laud. Num. 161. A. [8] That is as much as in him lay; for they uſe that Expreſſion, though a Prince was not actually depoſed.

that

that would come was welcome. When he was sat down, Amrou the Son of Hareth an ancient Mechzumian came in; he called him to him, and placing him by him upon his Sofa, asked him what Meat he liked best of all that ever he had eaten;[2] the old Mechzumian answered, An Asses Neck well seasoned and well roasted: You do nothing, says Abdolmélick, what say you to a Leg or a Shoulder of a sucking Lamb, well roasted and[3] covered over with Butter and Milk? Whilst he was at Supper he said, Abdolmélick An. Heg. 71. cæpit Jun. 14. A. C. 690.

How sweetly we live, if a Shadow would last!

After Supper was over he took the old Mechzumian along with him to satisfy him concerning the Antiquities of the Castle; and when the Answers to all his Questions began of Course with This was, and That was, and He was, and the like, it raised a melancholly Reflection in the Chaliph, and he repeated this Arabick Verse out of an ancient Poet;

And every thing that is new, (O Omaim!) goes to Decay, and every one that IS to Day goes to HE WAS.

[2] MS. Laud. Num. 161. A. [3] Hence I observe that the Arabians had not altered their Cookery since Abraham's time, who made use of Butter and Milk when he entertained the Angels. See Gen. xviii. 8. There is some Obscurity in the Arabick.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 71. cœpit Jun. 14. A. C. 690.

Then returning to his Sofa he threw himſelf upon it, and repeated theſe Verſes, Proceed leiſurely becauſe thou art mortal, and and chaſtiſe thy ſelf O Man!

For what is paſt will not be when it is gone, as that which is preſent will be paſt.

Or,

For what was will not be when it is paſt, as what is will be it was.

[7] When Múſaab's Head was brought to him in the Caſtle, one that ſtood by ſaid, Now I recollect ſomething very particular of my own Obſervation; I ſaw Hoſein's Head preſented in this ſame Caſtle to Obeidollah, Obeidollah's to Almochtar, Almochtar's to Múſaab, and now at laſt Múſaab's to your ſelf. The Chaliph was ſurpriſed and concerned at this Diſcourſe, and commanded the Caſtle to be forthwith demoliſhed to avert the ill Omen.

[8] When the News of Múſaab's Death was brought to his Brother Abdollah the Son of Zobeir, he made a Speech to the People upon that Occaſion as follows, "Praiſe be to God to "whom belongs the Creation and the Command of "all Things; who gives Dominion to whom he "pleaſes, and takes it away from whom he pleaſes;

[7] MS. Hun. Num. 495. D'Herbelot. [8] MS. Laud. Num. 161. A.

"and

" and ſtrengthens whom he pleaſes, and weakens Abdolmélick
" whom he pleaſes; only God never weakens him An. Heg. 71.
" that hath Truth on his Side, though he ſtands cœpit Jun. 14.
" alone, nor doth he ſtrengthen him whoſe Friend A. C. 690.
" is the Devil, though all the World ſhould joyn
" in his Aſſiſtance. There is News come from
" Iràk which is Matter both of Sorrow and Joy
" to us; it is the Death of Múſaab, to whom God
" be merciful. Now what rejoyceth us is, that " his Death is Martyrdom to him, and what is " Matter of Grief to us, is the Sorrow where-
" with his Friends will be afflicted at his Depar- " ture; but Men of Underſtanding will have re-
" courſe to Patience, which is of all the moſt noble
" Conſolation. As for my own Part, if I be a
" a Sufferer in Múſaab, I was ſo before in [my " Father] Azzobeir: [8] Nor was Múſaab any " thing elſe but one of the Servants of God and an " Aſſiſtant of mine. But the Irakians are trea- " cherous and perfidious, they betrayed him and " ſold him for a vile Price. And if we be killed,
" by God we do not dye upon Beds as the Sons of " Abilâſi die: By God there was never a Man
" of them killed in Fight, either in the Days of " Ignorance or Iſlam: But we do not die but " puſhing with Lances and ſtriking under the " ſhadow of Swords. As for this preſent World
" it diverts from the moſt High King, whoſe

[8] Here is a difficulty in the Arabick.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 71. cæpit Jun. 14. A. C. 690.

" Dominion ſhall not paſs away, and whoſe King- " dom ſhall not periſh; and if it [the preſent
" World] turns its Face I ſhall not receive it with " immoderate Joy; and if it turns its Back I " ſhall not bewail it with indecent Sorrow. I " have ſaid what I had to ſay, and I beg Par- " don of God both for my ſelf and you.

[6] Whilſt Mohalleb was engaged againſt the Separatiſts they received Intelligence of Múſaab's Death, before he and his Men knew any thing at all of it. Whereupon they called out to his Men, What! will you not tell us what you think of Múſaab? They ſaid, He is the Imàm of the right way. And he is, replied the Separatiſts, your Friend both in this World and that to come? They anſwered, yes. And you are his Friends both alive and dead? Yes. And what do you think of Abdolmélick the Son of Merwan? They ſaid, He is the Son of the accurſed; we are clear of him before God, and the ſhedding his Blood is more free for us than yours. And you are, continued the Separatiſts, his Enemies both alive and dead? Yes, we are his Enemies both alive and dead. Well, ſaid the Separatiſts, Abdolmélick hath killed your Imàm Múſaab, and you will make Abdolmélick your Imàm to Morrow, though you waſh your Hands of him to Day and curſe his Father. To which the other anſwered, You lye, [6] An Heg. 72 cæpit Jun. 3. A. C. 691.

ye

ye Enemies of God. But the next Day, when they were informed of the truth of it, they changed their Note, and Mohàlleb and all his Men took the Oath to Abdolmélick: Upon this account they were bitterly reproached by the Separatiſts, who ſaid to them, Now, you Enemies of God! Yeſterday you were clear of him both in this World and the World to come, and affirmed that you were his Enemies both alive and dead, and now to Day he is your Imàm and your Caliph, who killed your Imàm whom you had choſen for your Patron. Which of theſe two is the right? They could not deny what they had ſaid the Day before, and were loath to give themſelves the Lye; ſo they anſwered, You Enemies of God! we were pleaſed with the other ſo long as he preſided over us; and now we approve of this as we did before of the other. To which the Separatiſts anſwered, No, by God, but you are Brethren of the Devils, Companions of the Wicked, and Slaves to the preſent World. This is the Account of that Conference. Abdolmélick An. Heg. 72. cœpit Jun. 3. A. C. 691.

Abdolmélick, now upon his return into Syria, made Baſhur his Brother Governour of Cufah, and Caled the Son of Abdollah Governor of Baſorah. When Caled came thither, he made Mohalleb Superviſor of the Tribute; indiſcreetly, for Mohalleb was the beſt General of the Age, and in all Probability the Victory which was gotten gotten by the Azarakites was owing to his Absence: They beat Abdòlaziz who was sent against them, and took his Wife Prisoner: As they were talking about what she was worth, and valuing her at about an Hundred thousand Pieces, one of the Chief of them said, What, shall she escape so? I do not see that this Heathen doth any thing but cause disturbance amongst you, and struck her Head off.[2] Some that stood by, told him they could not tell whether they should praise him or blame him, he answered he did it only out of Zeal. Caled wrote a Letter to Abdolmélick acquainting him with the loss of the Army, and desiring to know his Pleasure, who answered him thus. "I understand by the Letter you sent by your Messenger, that you sent your Brother to fight against the Separatists; and I received the account of your Slaughter and Flight; and I enquired of your Messenger where Mohálleb was, who informed me that he was your Lieutenant over Ehwàz; God rejected thy Counsel when thou sentest thy Brother, an Arabian of Meccah to Battel, and didst keep Mohalleb by thy side to gather Taxes, who is a Man of a most penetrating Judgment, and good Government, hardened in War, and is the Son and the Grandson of it: See therefore and send Mohálleb to meet them

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 72. cœpit Jun. 3. A. C. 691.

[2] MS. Laud. Num. 161. A.

"in

" in Ehwáz or beyond Ehwáz; and I have sent " to Bashur to assist thee with an Army of Cu- " fians; and if thou goest and meetest thy Ene- " my, do not undertake any Enterprize against " him till thou hast shewn him to Mohálleb, and " asked his Advice about him if it please God. " Peace be upon thee, and the Mercy of God." Caled was not well pleased with the Contents of the Letter, both because he had blamed him for sending his Brother to manage the War, and because he had laid him under the restraint of doing nothing without the Advice of Mohálleb. Abdolmélick ordered Bashur to assist them with five Thousand Cufians, and to send a Messenger first out of Complaisance to Mohálleb, who was a Person of too great Consideration, not to be treated with the utmost Respect. Abdolmélick An. Heg. 72. cœpit Jun. 3. A. C. 691.

Their Forces being ready, they marched and met the Enemy near the City Ehwàz, for the Azarakites were advanced so far, and almost come up to the Camp of the Muslemans. There were Ships in the River, which Mohálleb advised Caled to seize; but before that could be put in Execution, there came a Party of the Enemies Horse, and set them on Fire. As Mohalleb passed by one of his Generals, and perceived he had not Intrenched himself, he asked him the reason of it. The other swore, he valued them no than a Camel's Fart. Mohálleb bad him not despise ſpiſe them, for they were the Lions of the Arabians. One of the Azarakite Poets heard what the General had ſaid to Mohalleb, and repeated three Verſes, the Meaning of which was, That he might be moſt properly compared to a Camel's Fart, whoſe good Works did not come up to his Pretences. They remained in their Intrenchmets about twenty Days; and Caled and Mohálleb fell upon them, and, after as bloody a Battel as had been fought in the Memory of Man, entirely routed them and took Poſſeſſion of their Camp, Caled ſent David to purſue them, and diſpatched an Expreſs to Abdolmélick acquainting him with the Succeſs; who immediately commanded his Brother Baſhur to ſend four Thouſand Horſe more to join David and purſue them into Perſia: Theſe Orders were obeyed till they had loſt almoſt all their Horſes, and were quite tired, and almoſt ſtarved, ſo that the greateſt part of the two Armies returned on Foot to Ehwàz.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 72. cœpit Jun. 3. A. C. 691.

Thus Abdolmélick in the Seventy ſecond Year having brought all the Eaſtern Part of the Muſleman Empire entirely under his Subjection, had no Oppoſition left but what was made at Meccah by old Abdollah the Son of Zobeir. Againſt him Abdolmélick ſent Hejage the Son of Joſeph, one of the moſt Eloquent as well as Warlike Captains that flouriſhed amongſt them, during the the Reigns of the Chaliphs. One Reaſon among others that inclined him to employ him in that Service was, becauſe when Abdolmélick was upon his return into Syria, Hejage ſaid to him, I ſaw in my Dream that I had taken the Son of Zobeir and flayed him; wherefore ſend me againſt him, and commit the Management of that War to my Charge. The Caliph was pleaſed with the Dream, and ſent him with a ſtrong Body of Syrians to Meccah, whither he had written before, promiſing them Protection and Security, upon Condition that they ſhould come under his Obedience. Abdollah ſent out Parties of Horſe againſt him, but in all the Skirmiſhes they came by the worſt. Hereupon Hejage wrote to Abdolmélick to ſend him ſufficient Force to beſiege Abdollah, aſſuring him that his Fierceneſs was very much abated, and that his Men deſerted daily. Abdolmélick wrote to Thàrik the Son of Amer to aſſiſt him, who joined him with five Thouſand Men. Hejage came to Thayef (a Town lying ſixty Miles Eaſtward of Meccah) in the Month Shaaban in the Seventy ſecond Year, and Thàrik came to him in the new Moon of Dulhagiah, but he did not go round the Temple, nor come near it, becauſe he was under a Vow; but kept himſelf in his Arms, and neither touched any Woman, nor Anointed himſelf till after the Death of the Son of Zobeir.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 72. cœpit Jun. 3. A.C. 691.

Ab-

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 73. cœpit Maii 22. A. C. 692.

Abdollah killed the Sacrifice (either Camels or Oxen) on the [1] killing Day, that is the tenth of [2] Moharram; but neither he nor his Friends performed the Rights of Pilgrimage, becauſe they had not been at Mount Arafat, which is neceſſary in order to the making a true Pilgrimage, but they being beſieged could not do it.

This ſame Year Abdolmélick wrote to Abdollah the Son of Hazim to perſuade him to come in, and promiſed him to give him the Revenues of Choſaran for ſeven Years upon that Condition; who took his Proffer ſo diſdainfully, that he told the Meſſenger if it were not for making a Diſturbance between the two Tribes, he would have killed him; however he made him eat the Letter he brought. After this Abdolmélick ſent a General againſt him with ſufficient Force, and killed him. Others ſay that he was not killed till after the Death of Abdollah the Son of Zobeir, and that Abdolmélick ſent Abdollah's Head to the Son of Házim, imagining that he would not then ſtand out any longer; but it had a quite contrary Effect, for as ſoon as he ſaw it, he ſwore he would never come under his Obedience as long as he lived; then calling for a Baſon he waſhed the Head and Embalmed it, and wrapped it up in Linen and prayed over it, and ſent it to Abdollah's Relations at Medinah;

[1] Arab. Yaumolnehri. [2] An Heg. 73. cœpit Maii 22. A. C. 692.

and

and made the Messenger eat the Letter, telling him that if he had not been a Messenger he would have struck his Head off: And some say that he cut his Hands and Feet off first, and afterwards his Head. Abdolmélick An. Heg. 73. cœpit Maii 22. A. C. 692.

[8] The whole time during which Abdollah was besieged was eight Months and seventeen Nights. They battered the Temple of Meccah with Engines, and it Thundered and Lightened so dreadfully, as put the Syrians into a terrible Consternation, and made them give over. At this Hejage stuck the corner of his Vest into his Girdle, and putting one of the Stones into it that they used to throw out of the Engines, slang it; his Example set them on Work afresh. The next Morning there came upon them Storm after Storm, and killed twelve of his Men, which quite dispirited the Syrians. Hejage said to them, O Syrians do not dislike this, I am a Son of Tehámah: This is the Storm of Tehámah: This Victory is just at hand: Rejoice at the News of it; their Men suffer as much by it as you do. The next Day there was another Storm, and some of Abdollah's Men were killed, which gave Hejage opportunity to encourage his Men and say, Do not you see that they are hurt, and you are in a state of Obedience, and they of Disobedience? Thus they continued fighting till a little

[8] MS. Laud. Numb. 161. A.

before

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 73. cœpit Maii 22. A. C. 692.

before Abdollah was killed. His Friends deserted from him every Day, and and ran over to Hejage. The greatest part of the Inhabitants of Meccah did so, to the Number of ten Thousand: Nay, his two Sons Hamzah and Chobeib left him, and went and procured Conditions for themselves. When he perceived himself forsaken on all sides, he went to his Mother (who was Grand-Daughter to Abubeker the first Caliph, and was then ninety Years of Age, a Woman of a most undaunted Spirit) and said to her, "O Mother! The People have deserted me "even to my own Children and Family, and I "have but a few left with me, and they are "such as would hardly be able to stand it out "an Hours Space; and these People will give "me whatsoever I desire in this World; what "do you advise me to do?" Son, said she, judge for your self; if you know that you are in the right, and pretend to be so, persevere in it; for your Friends have died for the sake of it; wherefore be not so obstinately resolved to save your Neck as to become the Scorn of the Boys of the Ommian Family! But if thou chusest the present World, Alas! bad Servant! thou hast destroyed thy self, and those that were killed with thee. And if thou sayest I stood to the Truth, and when my Friends declined I was weakened! This is neither the part of an Ingenuous nor a Religious Man.

Man. And how long can you continue in this World? Death is more eligible. Then Abdollah drew near, and kiſſed her Head, and ſaid, " By " God, this is the ſame Thought wherein I " have perſiſted to this very Day; neither did " I incline towards this World, nor deſire to live " in it, nor did any other Motive perſuade me to " diſſent, but my Zeal for God. However I had " a Mind to know your Opinion, and you have " added to the View which I had before: " Wherefore, Mother, look upon me as a dead " Man from this Day: Nor let your Grief be " immoderate, but reſign your ſelf to God's " Command; for your Son hath not ſtood in " the Footſteps of the Scandalous, nor done any " thing worthy of Reproach; nor prevaricated " in the Judgment of God, nor dealt treache- " rouſly in giving his Faith: nor ſupported him- " ſelf by doing Injury to any Perſon that deli- " vered up himſelf or entered into Covenant; " nor did any Injuſtice done by any of my Offi- " cers ever reach me that I approved of, but al- " ways diſcouraged it; nor was there any thing " that I preferred to the doing the Will of my " Lord. O God! thou knoweſt that I do not " ſay this for the Juſtification of my ſelf, but to " comfort my Mother, that ſhe may receive " Conſolation after my Deceaſe." She anſwer- ed, I hope in God, I ſhall have good Comfort in thee whether thou goeſt before me, or I before thee. Now go out upon my Soul, and ſee what will be the iſſue. To which he anſwered, "God give "thee a good Reward, O Mother! You will "not ceaſe praying for me, both before and "after." She anſwered, That I never ſhall; others are killed in vain, but thou for the Truth, O God! be merciful to him for his Watchfulneſs in the long Nights and his Diligence [6]. and his Piety towards his Father and me; O God I reſign my ſelf to what thou ſhalt command concerning him; I am pleaſed with what thou doſt decree; give me in Abdollah the Reward of thoſe that are grateful and perſevering. This was about ten Days before he was killed, and ſome ſay five. The Day whereon he was killed he went into the Houſe of his Mother, with his Coat of Mail on and his Helmet, and took hold on her Hand and kiſſed it. She ſaid, This Farewell is not for a long time. He told her he was come to take his leave of her, for this was his laſt Day in this Life. As he embraced her, ſhe felt the Coat of Mail, and told him that the putting that on did not look like a Man that was reſolved to die; he ſaid that he had not put it on, but only that he might be the better able to defend her; ſhe

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 73. cœpit Maii 22. A. C. 692.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 73. cœpit Maii 22. A. C. 692.

[6] Here is a word or two which I do not ſo well apprehend the meaning of: Watthemâ, Phi'l Hawâjeri'l Medinah wa Meccah.

ſaid

said she would not be so defended, and bad him put it off. [7] Then she bad him go out, assuring him that if he was killed he died a Martyr; he said he did not so much fear Death as the being exposed after it; to which she couragiously answered, that a Sheep when it was once killed never felt the flaying. Before he went out, to increase his Courage, she gave him a draught with a Pound of Musk in it. At last he went out, and defended himself to the Terror and Astonishment of his Enemies, killing a great many with his own Hands, so that they kept at a distance, and threw Bricks at him, and made him stagger; and when he felt the Blood run down his Face and Beard, he repeated this Verse, Abdolmélick An. Heg. 73. cœpit Maii 22. A. C. 692.

The Blood of our Wounds doth not fall down upon our Heels, but upon our Feet.

meaning, that he did not turn his Back upon his Enemies. Then they killed him, and as soon as Hejage heard the News he fell down and worshipped. His Head was cut off, and his Body hung up, and they smelt the Perfume of the Musk he had drank several Days after.

Tharik said to Hejage that never Woman bore a braver Man. How, said Hejage, do you commend a Man that was in Rebellion against the Emperor of the Faithful? Yes, answered [7] Elmakin.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 73. cœpit Maii 22. A. C. 692.

Tharik, and he will excuſe us; do you only conſider that we have been beſieging him theſe ſeven Months, and he had neither Army nor ſtrong Place of Defence, nevertheleſs whenever we engaged him he was always a Match for us, nay ſuperior to us. This Diſcourſe of theirs reached Abdolmélick's Ears, who ſaid that Tharik was in the right.

Abdollah was Caliph nine Years, being inaugurated in the ſixty fourth Year, immediately after the Death of Yezid the Son of Moawiyah. He was a Man of extraordinary Courage, but covetous to the laſt degree. So that this Sentence paſſed amongſt the Arabians for a ſort of a Proverb, That there was never a valiant Man but was alſo liberal, till Abdollah the Son of Zobeir. He was in a great Repute upon the account of his Piety: He is ſaid to have been ſo fixed and unmoved when he was at Prayer, that a Pidgeon lighted upon his Head, and ſat there a conſiderable time, without his knowing any thing of the Matter. [3] Abu'lpheda ſays he wore a Suit of Cloaths [4] forty Years without putting them off his Back, but doth not inform us what they were made of. This Family of the Zobeir's

[3] Abu'lpheda. MS. Poc. N. 303. [4] The Arabian Hiſtorians never uſe Figures to expreſs their Numbers, but write them in Words at length. It is hardly to be ſuppoſed that the Tranſcriber would be guilty of ſuch a Miſtake as to write Arbaina for Arbaah, i. e. Forty for four; and the other Account is incredible.

paſſed

passed amongst the Arabians for a half-witted sort of People. Abdolmélick An. Heg. 73. cœpit Maii 22. A. C. 692.

After he was dead, all Arabia acknowledged Abdolmélick for their Caliph, and Hejage took the Oaths of Allegiance for him. This Year Mohammed the Son of Merwan took Assaphiyah and beat the Greeks; and it is said that this same Year Othman the Son of Waled fought the Greeks on the side of Armenia with four Thousand Men, and beat their Army consisting of sixty Thousand.

[5] Hejage now Master of all Arabia in the seventy fourth Year, pulls down the Temple of Meccah, which Abdollah had repaired, placing the Stone on the outside of it again, and restoring it to the Form it was in before Mahomet's time. He exercised most unmerciful Cruelty upon the poor Medinians, and stigmatized them with marks in their Necks and Hands; he used frequently to pick Quarrels with them without any Provocation, and punish them without any Crime. He met with one of them once and asked him what was the reason he did not assist Othman the Son of Affán? He answered he did. Hejage told him he lyed, and immediately commanded a Stamp of Lead to be put upon his Neck. Thus he continned plaguing and tormenting them, till the Azárakites raising new

[5] An Heg. 74. cœpit Maii. 12. A. C. 693.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 74. cæpit Maii 12. A. C. 693.

Commotions in the East, Abdolmélick thought his Service necessary in those Parts, and made him Governour of Iràk, Choràsan and Sigistàn; upon which he removed from Medinah to Cufah, Abdolmélick's Brother Bashar being then dead. [3] He entered into Cufah muffled up in his Turbant; the Curiosity of the People drew them all round about him, who assured them they should soon know who he was: Then going directly to the Mosque he mounted the Membar or Pulpit, where he treated them after a very rough manner, and swore that he would make the Wicked bear his own Burthen, and fit him with his own Shoe; and a great deal more to the same purpose, which increased their Terror and Aversion. [4] One Day when he went into the Pulpit, after a short Pause he rose up and said, "O Irakians! methinks I see the Heads [of "Men] ripe and ready to be gathered, and Tur- "bants and Beards sprinkled with Blood."

The Day after he came to Cufah, hearing a noise in the Street, he went directly to the Pulpit, and made a most reproachful Speech to them, swearing that he would make such an Example of them by the Severity of his Punishments, as should exceed all that went before it, and be a Pattern for all that should come after it.

[3] An Heg. 75. cœpit Maii 1. A.C. 694. [4] Abu'lpheragius. MS. Laud. Num. 161. A.

it. He then began to give daily Instances of his Cruelty, and his Rage vented it self particularly upon those that had any hand in the Murther of the Caliph Othman. From thence he went not long after to Basorah, where he made them a Speech much to the same purpose that he had done before at Cufah; and to give them a taste of his Discipline, caused one of them to be Beheaded upon the Place, who had been informed against as being a Rebel. This provoked the Irakians to such a degree, that they made an Insurrection against him, but to no purpose, for he beat them in a Field fight, and having sent eighteen of their Heads to Mohalleb returned to Basorah.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 75. cœpit Maii 1. A. C. 694.

The Azarikites appearing with considerable Forces, Hejage sent Mohalleb and Abdorrahman the Son of Mehneph against them: They had good Success at the beginning; but Abdorrahman, thinking it a disparagement to be commanded by Mohalleb, neglected his Advice and would not Intrench, which gave the Enemy an opportunity of taking the advantage of him, and cutting him off. The Insurrection of the Basorians against Hejage gave the Azarikites great Encouragement at first, who hoped to make the best use of their mutual Dissentions; but after that Tumult was quelled, they found themselves disappointed.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 76. cœpit April 21. A. C. 695.

[3] But the greateſt Oppoſition that Hejage ever met with in the whole courſe of his Life, was begun by Shebib a Karegite, and Salehh another Sectary, who having been both on Pilgrimage at Meccah in the ſeventy fifth Year, when Abdolmélick was there, formed a Conſpiracy againſt him. The Caliph being informed of it, ſent to Hejage to ſeize them; but notwithſtanding his Vigilance Salehh ſtaid very ſecure for a Months ſpace at Cufah, where he concerted Meaſures with his Friends, and provided all things neceſſary for his Undertaking. His Sect were called the Safrians, and he was the firſt of them that ever appeared openly in Arms; he was a Man much given to Devotion, and had a great many Followers both in Mauſal and Meſopotamia to whom he uſed to read and expound the Alcoran. Some of his Auditors deſired that he would ſend them a Copy of what they once heard him deliver; he condeſcended to their Requeſt, and it was as followeth.

" [4] Praiſe be to God, who hath created the " Heavens and the Earth, and appointed the " Darkneſs and the Light; they that deny the " Faith make an equal to the Lord. O God! as " for us we will not make any equal to thee, nor " will we haſten but to thee, nor will we ſerve

[3] An. Heg. 76. cœpit April 21. A.C. 695. [4] Alcoran Chap. vi. ver. 1.

" any

" any beſides thee. To thee belong the Creation Abdolmélick " and the Government, and from thee come An. Heg. 76.
" good and hurt, and to thee [6] we muſt go. cœpit April 21.
" And we teſtify that Mahomet is thy Servant, A. C. 695.
" and thy Apoſtle whom thou haſt ſingled out,
" and thy Prophet whom thou haſt choſen, and
" in whom thou haſt delighted, that he ſhould " convey thy Meſſage, and thy Warning to thy " Servants; and we bear Witneſs that he con" veyed the Meſſage, and admoniſhed the People,
" and invited to the Truth, and ſtood in Righte" ouſneſs, and helped Religion, and made War
" upon the [7] Aſſociators, till God took him,
" upon whom be Peace. I exhort you to truſt
" in God, and to abſtain from the preſent World,
" and to deſire the other, and frequently to re" member Death, and to love the Believers, and " to ſeparate your ſelves from the Converſation
" of evil Doers. For Abſtinence from the pre" ſent World increaſeth the deſire of the Ser" vant towards that which is with God, and " cauſeth his Body to be at leiſure to obey God;
" and the frequent Remembrance of Death
" maketh the Servant ſtand in fear of his Lord,
" ſo as to be moved with Love towards him,
" and to humble himſelf before him. The ſe-" parating from evil Doers, is a Law to the [6] Arab. Is the going. [7] So they call all Idolaters and Chriſtians, as joining Partners with God.

Muſle-

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 76. cœpit April 21. A.C. 695.

" Muſlemans, God moſt high ſaith in his Book, " [4] Never pray for any of them that are dead, " nor ſtand at his Grave, for they denied God " and his Apoſtle, and died doing Evil. And the " love of the Faithful is a means whereby the " Favour of God is attained, and his Mercy " and his Paradiſe, (God make us and you of " the Number of thoſe that bear Witneſs to the " Truth, and perſevere.) Now it is of the " gracious doing of God towards the Believers, " that he ſent them an Apoſtle of their own, " who taught them the Book and Wiſdom, and " cleanſed them, and purified them, and kept " them in their Religion, and was gentle and " merciful to the Faithful, till God took him, " the Bleſſing of God be upon him. Then the " [5] Verifier ſucceeded him with the good liking " of the Muſlemans, and governed according to " his Direction and Tradition, till he went to " God, God be merciful to him. He left Omar " his Succeſſor, and God made him the Go- " vernour of this Flock, and he managed by the " Book of God, and revived the Tradition of " the Apoſtle of God; neither did he ceaſe to " do Juſtice to the People committed to his [4] Alcoran. Chap. ix. 85. [5] Arab. Aſſiddik. It is the Surname of Abubeker, which Mahomet gave him becauſe he verified or aſſerted the Truth of Mahomet's Journey to Heaven in the Night.

" Charge,

" Charge, nor feared any Accuſation in the " Cauſe of God till he went to him, God have " mercy upon him. After him Othman govern- " ed the Muſlemans, and he purſued a Shadow, " and broke down the Bounds, and perverted " Judgement, and weakened the Faithful, and " ſtrengthened the Wicked, and the Muſlemans " went to him and killed him, and God and " his Apoſtle are clear of him. And after him " the People agreed to give the Government to " Ali the Son of Abu Taleb, who did not make " it his Buſineſs to judge according to the Com- " mand of God to Men; but joined himſelf to " erroneous People, and was fixed amongſt " them and played the Hypocrite; and we are " clear of Ali and his Sectaries. Wherefore pre- " pare your ſelves, (God have mercy upon you) " with Alacrity for the holy War, againſt theſe " jarring People, and theſe erroneous and un- " juſt Imams; and for the going out of this " tranſitory Manſion, to the Manſion that ſhall " remain; and for the being joined to your Bre- " thren the Faithful who have certain Aſſur- " ance; who ſold the preſent World for the " other, and laid out their Subſtance in queſt " of the Favour of God in the latter end. Nei- " ther be afraid of being killed for the ſake of " God; for the being killed is eaſier than Death; " and Death cometh upon you quicker than " Thought,

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 76. cœpit April 21. A. C. 695.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 76. cœpit April 21. A. C. 695.

" Thought, and makes a Separation between " you and your Children, and your Families, " and your present World, notwithstanding " your exceeding Aversion to it, and your fear " of it: Wherefore sell your selves and your " Substance in Obedience to God, that you may " securely enter into Paradise, and embrace the " Black-eyed Girls. God make us and you thank- " ful, and full of Remembrance, such as are di- " rected in the Truth, and do that which is " right according to it."

Once when he was amongst his Friends, he broke out into these Expressions, " What do you " stay for? How long will you stand still? For, " this Iniquity hath spread it self, and this Inju- " stice is grown to an exceeding vast exorbitant " height and distance from the Truth in defiance " of the Lord. Wherefore let us come to some " Resolution, and see what is to be done." In the midst of these Speeches there came a Letter from Shebib to Salehh, to acquaint him that since he had complied with his Request, in making an attempt upon the present Powers, he desired to be informed in what Condition his Affairs were; that he thought there was no time to be lost; that he was not sure he should not be overtaken by Death before he had an opportunity of being engaged in a holy War, against these wicked ones. Salehh returned Answer, that he waited only only for him; that his delay had raiſed in him ſome Suſpicion; that they were making all neceſſary Preparations, and ſtaid for nothing but his coming. Shebib gathered together his ſmall Company and joined Salehh in Dara'liezirah, over which Mohammed Ben Merwan was Governour. They ſeized ſome of his Horſes in a neighbouring Village, upon which they mounted their Foot. Mohammed ſoon received Intelligence of their March, but deſpiſed the ſmallneſs of their Number (which did not exceed one Hundred and twenty) and commanded Adi to go againſt them with five Hundred Men, who begged his Excuſe, and told him that he knew that one of their Men was as good as an Hundred of theirs, and that it was unreaſonable to ſend him with ſuch an unequal Force; then Mohammed ordered him Five hundred more: So he marched from Harrad with this Thouſand, as unwilling as if he had been led to the Place of Execution. When he drew near to Salehh, he ſent a Meſſenger to let him know that he was not for fighting, and if he would depart out of that Territory, and invade ſome other, he would not oppoſe him. Salehh ſaid to the Meſſenger, Go and tell him, that if he is of our Opinion it ſhall be ſo, but if he be in the Meaſures of the Tyrants, and the Imàms of Enmity, we know what to do. To which Adi anſwered,

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 76. cœpit April 21. A. C. 695.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 76. cœpit April 21. A. C. 695.

swered, that he was not of his Opinion, but that he did not come to fight either against him, or or any one else. Salehh had no sooner received this Answer, but he rode full speed and surprised Adi saying the Noon Prayers, who suspected nothing of the matter, till he saw the Horse just coming upon him; his Men were all out of order, and put to the Rout without any Resistance. He trampled down Adi and his Standard as he was at Prayers, and moving directly to his Camp, took Possession of all that was in it. They that escaped carried this sad News to Mohammed, who was very anrgy, and sent Caled the Son of Jora with One Thousand five Hundred Men, and Hareth with One Thousand five Hundred more. [6] Calling them both together, he bad them go out against these wicked Separatists, and to add to their speed, told them that he that came up with the Enemy first should command the other. Enquiring after Salehh they were informed that he was marched towards Amed; they kept equal pace, and towards the Evening came up with Salehh, who sent Shebid against Hareth, whilst he charged the other General himself. The Victory was dubious a long time, notwithstanding the Disproportion of the Numbers; for one of the Separatists could beat ten or twenty of the other; at last Caled and Hareth

[6] MS. Laud. Num. 161. A.

per-perceiving that their Horſe were repulſed; alighted and fought on Foot; this quite altered the Condition of the Battel; for by this means they ſupported themſelves with their Lances againſt the Enemies Horſe, and at the ſame time their Archers galled them, and the remainder of their Horſe trampled them down. Thus they continued fighting till Night parted them, at which time Salehh haſt loſt thirty Men, and Caled and Hareth more than Threeſcore and ten. Both Parties were ſufficiently weary of one another, for the Battel was very ſharp the time it laſted, and a great many were Wounded on both ſides. After they were parted and retired to their reſpective Camps, having ſaid their Prayers, and refreſhed themſelves with ſuch Fragments as they had, Salehh aſked Shebib his Advice, who told him that they were over-matched, and that the Enemy would by intrenching themſelves prevent any Attempt againſt them. Upon this they Decamped under the Protection of the Night, and marched acroſs over Meſopotamia till they came to Mauſil, and from thence to a place called Daſcarah, where Hejage having received Intelligence of their approach, ſent a Body of Five Thouſand Men againſt them, under the Command of Hareth Alhamdáni. Three Thouſand of them were Cufians of the old Soldiers, and the other two Thouſand were choſen Men.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 76. cœpit April 21. A. C. 695.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 76. cœpit April 21. A. C. 695.

Men. Whilſt they were marching to Daſcarah, Salehh, was gone to Jaloúta and Catikin; Alhareth purſued him to a Place called Modbage, that lies upon the Borders of Mauſil, between Mauſil and Juchi. There they engaged. Salehh had then with him no more than ninety Men, theſe he divided into three Companies, Thirty in each: In a ſhort time Salehh was killed. Shebib was beaten off of his Horſe, and fought on Foot till he came to the Place where Salehh lay dead; whereupon he called out to the Muſlemans to come to him, for they had no Commander left, and bad them turn Back to Back, and make their Retreat to a neighbouring empty Caſtle: This they performed in exceeding good Order, for Seventy of them got in ſafe. Hareth ſurrounded them in the Evening, and bad his Men only ſet fire to the Caſtle-Gates, and ſo leave them there till the Morning, where they might be ſure to find them. Shebib knew very well that what was to be done muſt be done by the favour of the Night, becauſe it would be abſurd to expect that they ſhould be able to defend themſelves againſt ſuch a Force in the Morning; and his Men having firſt given him their hands in token of their Submiſſion; the Gates of the Caſtle being burnt to Coals, they wetted their Saddle Cloths and ſpreading them over the Coals ſtept over. Hareth and his Men were in their Camp without any Apprehenſion of danger, till about Midnight they found Shebib and his Men cutting all to pieces in the midſt of the Camp. Hareth himſelf was ſtruck down, but his Men carried him off the Ground, and ran away in the greateſt Confuſion and Conſternation. This is the firſt Victory that Shebib got; which added ſuch Courage to his Party that they daily increaſed, and became terrible to Hejage himſelf, who never omitted any Endeavour to extirpate them. After a great many Battels, wherein Shebib was always Superior, whilſt Hejage was gone to Baſorah he ſeized the City of Cufah.

were

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 76. cœpit April 21. A.C. 695.

This Year Mohalleb died, whom Hejage had made Governour of Choraſan: He was a Perſon of extraordinary Character, both for his Abilities and generoſity of Temper. When he felt Death approaching, he called his Sons about him and gave them a bundle of Arrows to break, which they told him they could not: He aſked them next if they could break them ſingly, they anſwered Affirmatively, he bad them imagine themſelves to be like that bundle of Arrows.

[3] This Year Abdolmélick cauſed the firſt Money to be Coined that ever was in uſe among the Arabians of their own; for before they uſed to trade with Greek and Perſian Money. The occasion was thus. Abdolmélick used to write in the beginning of the Letters that he sent to the Greek Emperor, Say, God is one.[4] Or, Say, there is one God; and then mention the Prophet with the date of the Hegirah: Whereupon the Grecian Emperour sent him Word, that he had made such and such Innovations in his manner of writing, and bad him alter it, or else he would send him some Coins with such a mention of their Prophet upon them, as they should not very well like. Abdolmélick was angry at this, and said A Curse upon their Coins; and from that time began to make Money. Hejage stamped some with this Inscription, Say, there is one God, which gave great offence to the Muslemans, because the Sacred Name of GOD would be exposed to the Touch of unclean Persons of both Sexes. Somyor a Jew regulated their Coinage, which was but rude at first, after whom it received several Improvements in the succeeding Reigns.

[3] Ebno'l Athîr. MS. Poc. Num. 137.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 76. cœpit April 21. A. C. 695.

[5] Now though Shebib had beaten the Army which Hejage had sent against him, and made such a vigorous Opposition, that the Cusians were not able to keep the Field; yet Hejage, resolved not to bear his Insults any longer, re-

[4] Alcoran. Where God is introduced speaking so to Mahomet. [5] An. Heg. 77. cœpit April 9. A. C. 696. MS. Laud. Num. 161. A.

prepreſented the Condition of that part of the Country to the Caliph Abdolmélick, who reinforced him with a ſufficient Number of Syrians, with which he gave Shebib Battel near Cufah. Shebib made a noble Defence, having in all but ſix hundred Men, but was forced at laſt to give way to the Syrians, whom Hejage was ſcarce able to hold up againſt him. At laſt Shebib's Brother was killed and his Wife Gazálah, who had attended him when he went firſt to Cufah, and made a Vow to ſay her Prayers in the great Temple, and read the Cow and the Family of Amram there (they are the Second and Third Chapters of the Alcoran) which ſhe had accordingly performed: A Body of Syrians purſued Shebib, who killed an hundred of them with the loſs of only thirty of his own Men. Some of them were ſo tired with their March and the Fight, that when they ſtruck with their Swords they could not carry an Edge; and ſome of them ſtruck as they ſat, becauſe they were not able to riſe. In this condition Shebib deſpairing of doing any thing left them, and paſſing over the Tigris went towards Juchi: Afterwards repaſſing the Tigris at [1] Waſet, he bent his Courſe towards Ehwaz; from thence into Perſia, and ſo on to Kerman, where he reſted and refreſhed

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 77. cœpit April 9. A. C. 696.

[1] This is by way of Prolepſis, for Waſet was not then built. Abno'l Athir.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 77. cœpit April 9. A. C. 696.

himſelf and his Men: In the mean time Hejage ordered his Wife Gazálah's Head to be waſhed and buried. Soon after Shebib began to advance forwards again, againſt whom Hejage ſent Sophyan the Son of Alabrad, whom Abdolmélick had ſent to his aſſiſtance out of Syria. They met at a Bridge called Dojail el Ehwaz. Shebib paſſed the Bridge firſt, and after a ſharp Encounter was repulſed. Returning again he renewed the Battel with Vigour, but was beaten back; and when he came to the Bridge he made a Stand with about an hundred Men, who fought ſo bravely till the Evening that the Syrians never felt themſelves ſo handled before. Sophyan perceiving that he could do nothing againſt them, commanded the Archers to ſhoot them, which they did for a while, till Shebib and his Men ruſhed in upon them with their Swords and killed above thirty of them; and then wheeling about he fell upon Sophyan, and they continued fighting deſperately till Night, and then retreating, Sophyan commanded his Men not to purſue them. When Shebib came to the Bridge, he commanded his Men to go over before him, reſolving to renew the Fight in the Morning. He brought up the Rear, and as he was upon the Bridge his Horſe leaped upon a Mare that was before him and looſned the Stones of the Bridge. Shebib's Foot ſtriking at the ſame time upon the Edge

Edge of a Boat, he was dismounted and fell into the Water. [8] When he rose up he said, When God decrees a thing it is done. Then putting up his Head a Second time he said, This is the Decree of the Almighty the Allwise [God!] These were the last Words of that great Captain, concerning whose Mother they relate this remarkable Story. Abdolmélick An. Heg. 77. cœpit April 9. A. C. 696.

[9] Yezid the Son of Naim was sent by Othman's command to assist the Syrian Mahometans against the Greeks in the twenty fifth year of the Hegirah. The Muslemans obtaining the Victory the Christians were exposed to Sale. Among the rest he espied a tall, beautiful, black-eyed Maid which he bought, and having brought her to Cufah commanded her to turn Mahometan, and upon her Refusal caused her to be beaten: This only increased her Aversion towards him, so that he was glad to let her alone to bring her to a good Humour. Afterwards she proved with Child of Shebib, and her Fondness to her Master increasing daily, she turned Mahometan of her own accord; because she knew it would be agreeable to him. So that she changed her Religion before Shebib was born, which was on the tenth of the Month Dulhagiah, being the day on which the Pilgrims kill the Sacrifices at Meccah.

[8] Elmakin. [9] MS. Laud. Num. 161. A. Ebnòl Athir. MS. Poc. Num. 137.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 77. cœpit April 9. A. C. 696.

Awaking out of a Slumber she said, I saw, as one that sleeps sees, that there went out from before me a Flame which diffused it self round about the Heavens, and spread it self to every quarter; after which a Coal dropt into a great Water and was quenched; now I have brought him forth upon the day wherein you shed Blood; and I interpret my Dream thus, That this Son of mine will be a Man of Blood, and that his Condition will be exalted to a very high degree in a short time. Hearing a false Rumour once of his being killed she gave no Credit to it, but as soon as she heard he was drowned she believed it, saying that she knew from the time of his Birth that he would come to no other End.

His Body being drawn up with a Net, they cut off his Head and sent it to Hejage; when he was opened they found his Heart prodigiously firm and hard like a Stone.

[1] In the eighty first year died Mohammed Ben Haniphiyah the third Son of Ali, who because he was not descended from Mahomet as Hasan and Hosein were is not reckoned amongst the Imàms, notwithstanding there were several of his Followers who secretly owned him to be lawful Caliph after Hosein's Death. Some of the Sectaries look upon him as a great Prophet whom God hath taken and preserved alive in a [1] An Heg. 81. cœpit Feb. 25. A. C. 700.

cer-

[1] certain Mountain; and that he ſhall hereafter appear again and fill the Earth with Juſtice and Piety, as it is at preſent full of Impiety and Wickedneſs. Abdolmélick An. Heg. 82. cœpit Feb. 14. A. C. 701.

[2] From the time of Shebib's Death the Saracen Empire was free from any Diſturbance within it ſelf, till the eighty ſecond year, when Abdorrahmàn the Son of Mohammed raiſed a very dangerous Commotion in the Eaſtern part of it upon this occaſion. Hejage, who hated him, ſent him with an inconſiderable Force againſt Zentil King of the Turks, with orders to carry the War into the midſt of his Country, with a malicious deſign to deſtroy him. Abdorrahmàn received ſecret Intelligence of his barbarous Intentions towards him, and ſoon acquainted his Men with the Meaning of the Expedition they were engaged in. The Soldiers were all in a Rage to find themſelves ſo baſely betrayed, and under a pretence of going to War ſent on purpoſe to be murdered, and fall a Sacrifice to Hejage's Malice againſt their General: They vowed Revenge, and unanimouſly ſwore to be true to Abdorrahmàn, and renouncing all manner of Subjection to Hejage, prepared themſelves to revenge his Perfidiouſneſs. Abdorrahman, having firſt concluded a Peace with the Turk, returned into Irak and marched directly againſt Hejage,

[1] Redwa. [2] An Heg. 82. cœpit Feb. 14. A. C. 701.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 82. cœpit Feb. 14. A. C. 701.

who being before informed of it had petitioned Abdolmélick for Succours out of Syria, who ſent him a conſiderable Army. With theſe Supplies Hejage marches againſt him, but being beaten in the firſt Battle, Abdorrahmàn carries his Victorious Army to Baſorah, where a great many of the Citizens throwing off their Allegiance to Abdolmélick, took the Oath to him, and Intrenching themſelves on one ſide of the City, they ſoon obtained a ſecond Victory over their Enemies. From thence he went to Cufah, where he was ſo far from meeting with any Oppoſition that the Citizens came out of their own accord to meet him, and took the Oath of Allegiance. In the mean time Hejage gathered together all the Forces he was able; and Abdorrahmán's Army on the other ſide was increaſed to the number of an hundred thouſand Men, among whom were ſeveral of Prime Note among the Baſorians, who had conceived an Averſion againſt Hejage upon the account of his Cruelty. They encamped [6] near one another; and in the ſpace of an hundred days fought fourſcore and one Battles. At laſt Hejage put Abdorrahmàn to flight, and cut off four thouſand of his Men. Abdorrahman retreated to Sahàn, where being ſeized by Hejage's Lieutenant who was going to him;

[6] Hejage in Dairkorrah and Abdorrahmàn in Dairalimaiim.

Zentil

Zentil the Turk, his Friend and Ally, having received notice of it came to his Reſcue; but upon his being [5] threatened with a War by Hejage in caſe he refuſed to deliver him up, he was forced to part with him. Abdorrahmàn having now no remedy left, and abhorring the thoughts of falling into the hands of his moſt implacable Enemy, took an opportunity of killing himſelf by a fall from the top of an high Houſe. Abdolmélick An. Heg. 82. cœpit Feb. 14. A. C. 701.

[6] In the eighty third year Hejage built a City upon the River Tigris which he called Waſet, from its lying in the Middle between Baſorah and Cufah, that being the Signification of the Arabick Word. [7] The Perſian Geographer ſays, that it is Situate at an equal diſtance from Bagdad, Cufah, Ebwaz and Báſorah, that is, about fifty Leagues from each of them.

Now though Hejage ſurvived Abdolmélick and managed all the chief Affairs for ſome time under his Son Waled, yet ſince we muſt terminate this part of our Hiſtory with the Reign of this Caliph (which was deſigned to have been carried down to the Line of the Abbaſides) and it being very uncertain whether or no we ſhall ever have either Opportunity or Inclination to continue it any farther; before we take our leave of this great Man, by whoſe Vigilancy, Courage,

[5] Abu'lpheda. [6] An. Heg. 83. cœpit Feb. 3. A. C. 702.
[7] D'Herbelot in Vaſſeth.

and

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 87. cœpit Feb. 3. A. C. 702.

and Conduct the Saracen Empire was perfectly quieted and firmly eſtabliſhed under the Government of the houſe of Ommiyah, it will not be amiſs to relate a few Inſtances illuſtrating the Greatneſs and Singularity of his Genius.

[9] One day as he was taking a Walk in the Field, he met with a wild Arab who knew nothing at all of him, and aſked him what ſort of a Man this Hejage was whom they talked of ſo much. The Arab anſwered that he was a wicked Man. Then ſaid Hejage, do you not know me? The Arab anſwering No; I would have you to know then, ſaid Hejage, that it is Hejage you are talking to now.

The Arab having heard him talk after this manner, without expreſſing any manner of concern ſaid to him; And do you know who I am? No, anſwered Hejage. I am, ſaid the Arab, of the Family of Zobeir, whoſe Poſterity all become Fools three days in the Year, and this is one of them. Hejage could not forbear laughing and admiring ſuch an ingenious Come-off as this: So that though he was extremely ſevere and reckoned cruel, for they ſay he had put to Death an Hundred and twenty Thouſand Perſons, and when he died had fifty Thouſand in his Priſons; yet he pardoned this Arab, whom he eſteemed for his Wit and Courage.

[9] D'Herbelot in Hejage.

Now

Now ſee another Accident, wherein Hejage ſhewed plainly what he was. Having taken a great many Officers Priſoners in the Battel which he gained over Abdorrahmàn; he reſolved to put them all to the Sword. One of the Priſoners, juſt as he was going to be Executed, cried out that he had a piece of Juſtice to demand of Hejage.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 88. cœpit Feb. 3. A. C. 702.

Hejage, very much ſurpriſed at what he ſaid, aſked him what he had to demand of him? The Priſoner anſwered, It is becauſe when our General Abdorrahmàn railed againſt you after an extravagant manner, I told him he was in the wrong. Upon this Hejage aſked the Priſoner if he had any body to witneſs his ſaying ſo. Yes, anſwered the Priſoner; and ſhewed him one of his Comrades condemned to Death as well as himſelf, who was preſent when he ſaid it. Hejage being ſatisfied of the truth of the Fact, ſaid to the Witneſs, And what is the reaſon you did not do ſo as well as your Comrade? This undaunted Man anſwered him fiercely, I did not do it becauſe you are my Enemy. Hejage gave them both their Lives; the one to acknowledge his Obligation; the other for having confeſſed the Truth with ſo much Frankneſs and Courage.

Some People having complained of the Cruelty of his Behaviour towards his Subjects, and ſet

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 83. cæpit Feb. 3. A. C. 702.

ſet the fear of God before his Eyes; he inſtantly mounted the Pulpit to harangue the People, and without any Preparation diſcourſed them after this manner, with his ordinary Eloquence. "God hath at preſent given me the Power over "you, and if I exerciſe it with ſome Severity, "do not you believe that you ſhall be upon bet-"ter Terms after my Deceaſe! After the man-"ner that you live you will always be ill uſed; "for God hath a great many Servants, and when "I ſhall be dead he will ſend you another, who "may poſſibly execute his Commands againſt "you with greater Severity. Would you have "a Prince ſweet and moderate? Exerciſe Ju-"ſtice among your ſelves and obey his Orders. "Depend upon it that the Behaviour of your "ſelves is the Principle, and the Cauſe of the "good or ill Treatment which you receive at "his Hands. The Prince may juſtly be com-"pared to a Looking-glaſs; all that you ſee in "the Glaſs is nothing but the return of the Ob-"jects you preſent to it."

Once when he was a Hunting, he loſt his Company, and found himſelf very thirſty in a loneſome Place, where an Arab was feeding his Camels. As ſoon as he appeared the Camels were ſcared away, which made the Arab, who was minding ſomething elſe, lift up his Head in a great Paſſion and ſay, Who is this with his fine fine Cloaths that comes here in the Desart to scare my Camels, the Curse of God light upon him. Abdolmélick An. Heg. 83. cœpit Feb. 3. A. C. 702.

Hejage without taking notice of what he said came up to him, and saluted him very civilly, wishing him Peace; but he instead of returning his Salutation answered him roughly, that he neither wished him Peace, nor any Blessing of God. Hejage seemed not to understand him, and begged of him some Water to Drink. The Arab told him, that if he had a mind to Drink, he might alight and help himself, for he was neither his Fellow nor his Man: Hejage did as he bad him, and having drunk asked him this Question, Whom do you believe to be the greatest and most excellent of all Men? It is the Prophet sent by God, (burst you) said the Arab. And what do you say of Ali, added Hejage? The Arab answered, His Excellency cannot be sufficiently expressed in Words. Hejage continuing his Discourse asked what he thought of Abdolmélick! The Arab made no Answer at first, but being pressed he let fall as much as if he took him to be a bad Prince. Why so, answered Hejage? Because he has sent us for a Governour the wickedest Man under the Heavens.

Hejage, knowing that the Arab spoke of him, said no more; when it happened that a Bird flying over their Heads made a sort of Noise, which which the Arab had no ſooner heard, but he looked ſtedfaſtly upon Hejage, and aſked him who he was. Hejage having aſked him what was the Reaſon of that Queſtion; It is, ſaid the Arab, becauſe this Bird that went by told me that there was a Company of People not far off, and that very likely you are the Chief of them. The Arab had no ſooner made an end of his Diſcourſe, when Hejage his People came up, and received Order from him to carry the Arab along with them.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 83. cœpit Feb. 3. A. C. 702.

The Day after, Hejage called for him, and made him ſit down at his Table, and commanded him to eat; the Arab, before he began to eat, ſaid his uſual Grace, God grant that the end of this Meal may be as fortunate as the beginning.

Whilſt they were eating, Hejage aſked him if he remembered the Diſcourſe that had paſſed between them the Day before. The Arab anſwered him immediately; God proſper you in every thing, but as for Yeſterday's Secret, take care you do not divulge it to Day. That I will, ſaid Hejage; but you muſt chuſe one of theſe two things, either to acknowledge me for your Maſter, and then I will retain you in my Service; or elſe to be ſent to Abdolmélick, to whom I ſhall give an account of all that you have ſaid of him. The Arab having heard Hejage's Proposal answered him instantly: There is a third way you may take, which seems to me to be much better. What is that, said Hejage? It is, said the Arab, to send me Home, and that you and I may never see one another any more. Hejage, as fierce as he was, was pleased to hear the Man talk with so much Spirit, and gave him ten Thousand Drachms of Silver, and sent him home according to his Desire. Abdolmélick An. Heg. 83. cœpit Feb. 3. A. C. 702.

po-

It is proper to observe here, upon the occasion of this Bird that made it self be understood by the Arabian, that there are Folks among the People of Arabia that pretend to know the Language of Birds. They say that this Science has been known amongst them ever since the time of Solomon, and the Queen of Sheba, who had a Bird call Húdhud, that is the Houp, who was the Messenger of their Amours.

Kumeil the Son of Ziyad was a Man of fine Wit. He lived in the time of Hejage, and did by no means approve of his Conduct. One Day Hejage made him come before him, and reproached him, because in such a Garden, and before such and such Persons, which he named to him, he had made a great many Imprecations against him, saying, The Lord blacken his Face, that is, Fill him with Shame and Confusion, and wished that his Neck was cut off, and his Blood shed.

Kumeil,

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 83. cœpit Feb. 3. A. C. 701.

Kumeil who had a very ready Wit, answered him instantly; It is true that I did say these Words in such a Garden, but then I was under a Vine-Arbour, and was looking upon a Bunch of Grapes that was not yet ripe, and I wished that they would turn Black soon, that they might be cut off and made Wine of. This ingenious Explication pleased Hejage so well, that he sent Kumeil home, and re-established him in his Favour.[1]

[1] Ebn Corrah, a Person celebrated for his Piety and his Learning, and whose Father had been one of the Companions of the Apostle, was very well acquainted with him. One Day when he was with him, the Porter came out and told them, that there was a Kateb or Secretary at the Gate; and which Ebn Corrah said, These Secretaries are the worst of all sorts of People. Nevertheless the Secretary came in and was well received by Hejage, who after he had dismissed him, said to Ebn Corrah, Were it not for the Title of Companion of Mahomet that is in your Family, I would make your Neck be cut off: For the Alcoran says, Honour the Writers. Ebn Corrah answered him immediately, I speak of the Secretaries of the Divàn, and not of the Angels which are called Writers in the Alcoran, because they write the Actions of Men to produce them at the last Judgment.

[1] D'Herbelot in Corrah.

It

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 83. cœpit Feb. 3. A. C. 702.

[4] It is reported that Hejage, to excuſe the Severity which he exerciſed over thoſe that were under him, uſed frequently to ſay; that the ſevere or even violent Government of a Prince, is better than a weak and too indulgent Government; becauſe that only doth wrong to ſome particular Perſons, whereas this other hurts and injures all the People in general.

He alſo uſed to ſay, that the Obedience due to Princes is more abſolute and neceſſary, than that which Men owe to God; according to the Alcoran, for that ſpeaking of this latter ſays, Obey God as far as you are able: In which Words there is a Condition or Exception: But of that which concerns Princes it is ſaid, Hear and obey, without any Exception: So that, ſaid he, if I command any one to ſubmit to ſuch or ſuch a thing, and he refuſes it, he is guilty of Diſobedience, and conſequently worthy of Death.

Some having heard him talk after this manner, ſaid to him: Then you are an envious and an ambitious Man, becauſe you pretend to have a greater Authority than others. To which he anſwered; He is ſtill more envious and ambitious than me, who ſays to God, Give me, O Lord, a Condition of Life which no body can enjoy after me.

[4] Idem in Hegjage.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 83. cœpit Feb. 3. A. C. 702.

Having once recommended himſelf to the Prayers of a Religious Muſleman, he inſtantly prayed that it would pleaſe God to kill him quickly, for, ſaid he, there can nothing fall out better either for him or for the People.

Mircond writes that when he was taken to his Bed of his laſt Sickneſs, he conſulted his Aſtrologer to know of him, if he did not find in his Ephemerides that ſome great Captain was near the end of his Days. The Aſtrologer anſwered him, that a great Lord called Kolaib was threatened according to his Obſervations to die quickly. Hejage replied, That is exactly the Name that my Mother gave me when I was a Child. This word ſignifies in the Arabick, a little Dog.

The Aſtrologer, no leſs imprudent in his Diſcourſe, than skilful in his Art, went on very bluntly ſaying, Then it is you that muſt die, you have no room to doubt it. Hejage, offended at this Diſcourſe, ſaid inſtantly to the Aſtrologer, Since I muſt die, and you are ſo dextrous in your Predictions, I will ſend you before me into the other World, that I may make uſe of you: and gave order at the ſame time to have him diſpatched.

The ſame Author places the Death of Hejage in the Ninety fifth Year of the Hegirah, and the Fifty fourth of his Age; and ſays of him, that he

he was born ſhut up at the Bottom; ſo that they were forced to open him with Surgeons Inſtruments. Abdolmélick An. Heg. 83. cœpit Feb. 3. A. C. 702.

They ſay that he was ſo magnificent in his Entertainments, that he had ſometimes a thouſand Tables furniſhed, and that he uſed to make ſuch large Preſents to his Friends, as to give a Million of Pieces of Silver at one time.

Abùlpheragius obſerves, that he fell ſick with eating Dirt. That Dirt is a ſort of Medicinal Clay, called by the Latins Terra Lemnia, and by the Arabians, Thîn, and Thîn Mechtoum, Lutum & Lutum ſigillatum; this threw him into a Conſumption of which he died. Thus much concerning Hejage out of Monſieur D'Herbelot.

[2] In the Eighty ſixth Year of the Hegirah Abdolmélick died. The Phyſicians had told him, that if he drank he would die; but his Thirſt increaſed ſo violently, that he was not able to forbear any longer, but commanded his Son Waled to give him ſome Water, which he refuſing he commanded his Daughter Phatemah; but Waled willing to keep him alive as long as he could, held her, and would not ſuffer it. Whereupon Abdolmélick told him in a Paſſion, that if he did not let her go, he would diſinherit him: So ſhe gave him Water, and he quickly expired. He died in the middle of the Month Shewàl: But he was always afraid of the Month Ramadan, and uſed to ſay he ſhould die in it; becauſe he was born in it, and weaned in it, and had learned the Alcoran by Heart in it, and in it was ſaluted Emperor.

[2] An Heg. 86. cœpit Jan 1. A.C. 705. Ebnel Athir.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 86. cœpit Jan 1. A. C. 705.

[1] This Caliph having dreamt one Night, that he made Water in the moſt ſacred Part of the Temple of Meccah; and this Dream happening four times ſucceſſively; Saad, a Man excellently ſkilled in the Interpretation of Dreams, told him that four of his Children ſhould enjoy the Caliphate one after another; which accordingly came to paſs.

He had two Nicknames given him, the one was the [2] Sweat of a Stone, becauſe of his extreme Covetouſneſs; the other was [3] Father of Flyes, upon the account of his ſtinking Breath, which was ſo nauſeous that it killed all the Flies that light upon his Lips.

The Inſcription of his Seal was, I believe in God our Saviour.

Abu'lpheda ſays, that he was a Man of Foreſight, and of very good Capacity and Underſtanding; he was couragious, learned and wiſe; but his being made Caliph quite turned him, and ſpoiled all his good Qualities.

[1] Elmakin D'Herbelot. [2] Arab. Rafhhòl Hejer. [3] Aboùl Zebàb.

he

He died in the ſixtieth Year of his Age. He was much more Powerful than any of his Predeceſſors. He ſubdued Abdollah the Son of Zobeir, and added Arabia to his Dominions; he entirely quelled all the ſeveral ſorts of Sectaries that appeared in Arms againſt him: In his Reign India was conquered in the Eaſt, and his victorious Arms penetrated even as far as Spain in the Weſt.

Abdolmélick An. Heg. 86. cœpit Jan. 1. A. C. 705.

F I N I S.

SENTENCES

OF

ALI

Son-in-Law of MAHOMET, and his Fourth Succeſſor.

Tranſlated from an Authentick Arabick Manuſcript in the Bodleian Library at Oxford,

By SIMON OCKLEY, B.D.

Profeſſor of Arabick in the Univerſity of CAMBRIDGE, and Chaplain to the Right Honourable ROBERT Earl of OXFORD and Earl MORTIMER.

THE PREFACE.

IF Providence hath removed us to a greater Diſtance from the influence of thoſe Genial Rays which ripen the Wits of the Eaſtern Nations, it hath made us abundant Amends, by indulging us in this Conceit, that we are wiſer than all the reſt of the World beſides.

There are ſome ſorts of pleaſing Madneſs, which it would be Cruelty to cure a Man of. By bringing him to his Senſes, you make him Miſerable.

You will aſk me, perhaps, what is the Meaning of all this? Why, in good truth, the Meaning of it is, a juſt Indignation againſt the Impertinence of thoſe who imagine that they know every thing, when in reality they underſtand nothing.

And to be more particular: The Folly of the Weſterlings, in deſpiſing the Wiſdom of the Eaſtern Nations, and looking upon them as Brutes and Barbarians; whilſt we arrogate to ourſelves every thing that is Wiſe and Polite; and if we chance to light upon a juſt Thought, we applaud our ſelves upon the Diſcovery, though it was better underſtood Three Thouſand Years ago.

This

This happens to us through want of good Reading, and a true Way of Thinking; for the Case is this, That little smattering of Knowledge which we have, is entirely derived from the East. They first communicated it to the Greeks, (a vain, conceited People, who never penetrated into the Depths of Oriental Wisdom) from whom the Romans had theirs. And after Barbarity had spread it self over the Western World, the Arabians, by their Conquests, restored it again in Europe: And it is the wildest Conceit that can be imagined, for us to suppose that we have greater Geniuses, or greater Application, than is to be found in those Countries: if it be allowed that we have of late made greater Advances in the Sciences; that is not so much to our present Purpose, as the Consideration of Things of Universal Necessity, the Fear of God, the Regulation of our Appetites, prudent Oeconomy, Decency and Sobriety of Behaviour in all Conditions and Emergencies of Life; in any of which Articles, (which, after all, are the Grand Concern) if the Westerlings have made any, even the least Improvement, to the Eastern Wisdom, I must confess my self to be very much mistaken.

They have their Wisdom by Inheritance, derived from their Fore-fathers through numerous Generations. They are tenacious of their Ancient Customs, and retain the Precepts of their Ancestors; they couch more solid Wisdom under one single

Apho-

Aphoriſm, than ſome European Writers would put into a Syſtem.

They govern their Families with Prudence and Diſcretion. We make their Polygamy an Objection againſt them; but we muſt conſider that they are not Chriſtians, and therefore continue their Way of Living, after the Patriarchal Manner. But to ſay no more upon that Point, how would they abhor and abominate the horrible Inſtances which we have of European Lewdneſs!

How would they ſmile, to ſee a Man jangling it out with his Wife thirty or forty Years together, which of the two ſhould govern the Family! Others calling Riot and Exceſs, Impertinence and Rage, good Fellowſhip! Another beſpeaking a New Suit this Week, leſt he ſhould be the Jeſt of the Town and Country, for being out of Faſhion the next! And ſome cumbring One Houſe with far-fetched and dear-bought Superfluities, at ſuch an Expence as would provide decent Furniture for Fifty!

Some Perſons of Underſtanding have been of Opinion, that the Wiſdom of a Nation may be judged of by the Sententiouſneſs of their Proverbs and Sayings in common uſe among them: In this the Arabs excell all Nations. As for their Proverbs, ſtrictly ſo called, in which there is Alluſion to ſome Hiſtory, Animal, Vegetable, or the like, they cannot be underſtood without a Comment, and do not come under our preſent Conſideration. What we here preſent the Reader with, is a little Collection of Wiſe Sentences, calculated for the Direction of a Man's Conduct in Affairs of the greateſt Conſideration, and are of the ſame Nature as the Proverbs, and Eccleſiaſticus.

and

They are called the Sentences of Ali the Son of Abu Taleb. The whole Book is, as near as I can gueſs, not much leſs than our New Teſtament. I ſhall not add any more concerning Ali in this Place, becauſe I have written his Life at large: It is the Firſt in the Second Volume of the Hiſtory of the Saracens.

But I am far from Believing that Ali was the Author of all theſe Sentences. He might Collect them, for ought I know, and add ſome more of his own; but this I am ſure of, that they ſavour of much greater Antiquity than the time in which he lived; becauſe he was Contemporary with Mahomet, who flouriſhed in the Year of our Lord Six hundred and twenty two. Perhaps there are ſome who will not allow the Arabians to have had ſo much Learning among them at that Time, as to be able to undertake ſuch a Work: But I ſhall not enter into that Diſpute at preſent.

The Book is a Venerable Piece of Antiquity, and it is Pity but we had it all Tranſlated; which would be difficult to be exactly performed, unleſs

by

by a Perſon who hath had the Advantage of Travelling into the Eaſtern Countries.

To criticiſe upon it in the proper manner, One ought to have regard not only to Precepts of that kind, contained in the Old Teſtament, but whatſoever elſe can be found that is Jewiſh, either in Eccleſiaſticus, the Talmud, Sentences of Ben Syra, or any other Rabbinical Records. Not that I believe that the Arabians derived their Knowledge from the Jews, but that they were Collateral with them in that reſpect; and that there are a great many things which they derived from Abraham and Iſhmael. The ſame is to be conceived of the Idumeans, Moabites, and Ammonites, of all which there is no queſtion but there are Remains in Arabia, though now undiſtinguiſhed.

Which that I may not ſeem to ſuggeſt without any Reaſon at all, give me Leave to offer this for the Preſent; That the Conteſt, before the Time of Alexander the Great, lay between the Eaſtern Powers and the more Weſtern Parts of Syria, Paleſtine, Ægypt, and Æthiopia. The Peninſula of Arabia being conterminous, and yet quite out of the Way of thoſe numerous Armies; it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe that the diſtreſſed Inhabitants, through whoſe Country theſe Forces were to paſs, retired thither. And it was their Cuſtom always, either at the Parting with their Children, and eſpecially upon

upon their Death-Beds, to recommend to them ſome few Precepts founded upon their own or their Fore-fathers Experience, which afterwards encreaſing, were collected into Volumes by Wiſe and Learned Men. After the ſame manner Eccleſiaſticus was written, as appears by the Preface of it, and this Arabick one of ours, without all queſtion; but how or by whom, remains yet undiſcovered.

The Sentences are full, and to the Purpoſe: They breathe a Spirit of Devotion, Strictneſs of Life, and expreſs the greateſt Gravity, and a moſt profound Experience in all the Affairs of Human Life. It is not expected that there ſhould be a Turn, as we call it, in every one of them, nor that we need be ſurprized at every Line, when we knew from the Divine Books the Contents of it before.

All that I ſay, is, that there is enough, even in this little Handful, to vindicate, in the Judgment of any Man of Senſe, the poor injured Arabians, from the Imputation of that groſs Ignorance faſtened upon them by Modern Novices.

SEN-

SENTENCES of ALI,
Son-in-Law of MAHOMET, And his Fourth Succeſſor.

---

1. FEAR God, and thou art ſecure from every one elſe.

2. Contradict thyſelf, and thou ſhalt find Reſt.

3. The Fear of God brightneth the Heart.

4. The beſt part of Riches, is that which is ſpent in God's Way.

5. Acquieſcence in the Divine Will, is the Healing of the Heart.

6. The Diſeaſe of the Heart is in Concupiſcence.

7. A Man's Behaviour is the Index of the Man; and his Diſcourſe is the Index of his Underſtanding.

8. The Covetous Man's Penny is a Stone.

9. One Fault is a great Matter; but the Remembrance of Divine Things, and a thouſand Obediences, is but a ſmall Matter.

10. The Remembrance of Youth is a Sigh.

11. The Sight of a Friend brightneth the Eye.

12. Re-

12. Reverence thy Father, and thy Son will reverence thee.

13. The Enjoyment and Delight of Life consisteth in Security.

14. The Order of a Wise Man is the Highest of Orders.

15. Thy Lot, or Portion of Life, is seeking after thee; therefore be at rest from seeking after it.

16. The restraining the Soul [or Self] from the Appetite, is the greatest Holy War.

17. Attend diligently to the Consequences, and thou shalt escape from Slips.

18. The Favour of God is the nearest of all Ends to be obtained.

19. The Favour of God, He be Praised, is joined to the Obedience towards him.

20. Thy Delight in thyself, is from the Corruption of thy Understanding.

21. Thy Delight in the World, is from the Badness of thy Choice, and the Misery of thy Labour.

22. He delights in Contempt, who openeth his Grievance to another.

23. The shewing Mercy to the Afflicted, bringeth down Mercy.

24. He delights in Disappointment, who depends upon bad Men for his Subsistence.

25. I delight more in the Determination [or Opinion] of a [3] Religious, than in the Strength of a Man.

26. The Riding (i.e. Governing) thy Appetite, will procure Riches.

27. The Riding the Appetites cuts off Mens Obſervation.

28. A Man's Advice is the Balance of his Underſtanding.

29. Every Man's Portion is as much determined as his Latter End.

30. A Man's Advice is according to the Meaſure of his Experience.

31. A Man's Subſiſtence is according to what he propoſeth, i. e. according to his Management; becauſe every Action of his Life tends to ſomething or other which contributes either to the encreaſing or diminiſhing him. Not that this can be affirmed of every Action conſidered abſtractedly, but as it connects thoſe Actions together, which neceſſarily tend to the Determining a Man's Condition of Life.

32. A Man's gentle Behaviour and Liberality make his Enemies love him.

33. A Man's Meſſenger is the Interpreter of his Meaning; but his Letter is of more Efficacy than his Diſcourſe.

[3] In the Arabick it is Aſsheick, which ſignifies a Profeſſed Doctor, that liveth up to the Strictneſs of the Law.

34. The Apoſtles of God, He be Praiſed, are the Interpreters of the Truth, and the Ambaſſadors between the Creator and the Creature.

35. The Delight of the [7] Servant in himſelf is joined to the Diſpleaſure of his Lord.

36. Conſider before thou doeſt any thing, and thou ſhalt not be blamed in what thou doeſt.

37. The glittering Ornaments of the World ſpoil weak Underſtandings.

38. Liberality is the Cauſe of Love.

39. Performing a Man's Promiſe is the Cauſe of Unity.

40. Abſtinence is the Cauſe of Pure Religion.

41. Concupiſcence is the Cauſe of certain Deſtruction.

42. Truſt in God, is the Cauſe of Pure Faith.

43. Deſire is the Cauſe of the Deſtruction of the Underſtanding.

44. The Love of the Preſent World is the Cauſe of Miſery.

45. Infidelity is the Cauſe of the Removal of God's Bleſſing.

46. Following one's Anger is the Cauſe of Deſtruction.

47. Good Education is the Cauſe of a refined Diſpoſition.

By [7] SERVANT is meant the Creature; by LORD, the Creator.

48. Gen-

48. Gentleneſs of Behaviour is the Cauſe of Reverence.

49. The Power of Religion is the Cauſe of Abſtinence.

50. Thankfulneſs is the Cauſe of Encreaſe.

51. For the Soul to be employed about what ſhall not accompany it after Death, is the greateſt Weakneſs.

52. To depend upon every one without Diſtinction, is Weakneſs of Underſtanding.

53. That is the Man of Underſtanding, that overcometh his Appetite, and will not ſell HIS WORLD TO-COME, for HIS PRESENT WORLD.

54. He is the Cunning Man, that neglects other People, and looks narrowly after himſelf.

55. Fear withholds the Soul from Sins, and reſtrains it from Tranſgreſſions.

56. He is an Underſtanding Man that refrains his Tongue from Detraction.

57. He is a Believer that purifieth his Heart from Doubt.

58. Riches are a Damage to the Owner, except that Part of them which he ſends before him.

59. The World is the Shadow of a Cloud, and the Dream of Sleep.

60. The truly Pious, their Works are pure, their Eyes Weeping, and their Hearts Trembling.

61: The truly Pious, their Souls are contented, and their Appetites dead; their Countenances chearful, and their Hearts ſorrowful.

62. The Believer always remembers God, and is full of Thought: He is Thankful in Proſperity, and Patient in Adverſity.

63. Partnerſhip in Poſſeſſion leadeth to Confuſion: Partnerſhip in Counſel leadeth the Right Way.

64. KNOWLEDGE calleth out to PRACTICE; and if it anſwereth, a [WELL:] If not, it goeth away.

65. Things (or the Affairs of Human Life,) go by Divine Decree, not by our Adminiſtration.

66. There are two ſorts of Patience; the one, by which we bear up in Adverſity, which is fine and beautiful; but that Patience whereby we withſtand the Commiſſion of Evil is better.

67. A Man's entertaining a mean Opinion of himſelf, is a Demonſtration of the Gravity of his Underſtanding, and a Branch of the Abundance of his Excellency.

68. A Man's admiring himſelf, is a Demonſtration of his Deficiency, and a Branch of the Weakneſs of his Underſtanding.

69. He that is certain of (or firmly believeth) a Future State, is the moſt melancholy Man, upon his own account, of all Men in the World.

70. He that periſhes, is one that buſies himſelf ſelf beſide himſelf; and whoſe TO-DAY is worſe than his YESTERDAY.

71. He is thy true Friend, that takes care of thee as himſelf, and prefers thee to his Riches, Children, and Wife.

72. He is a Wiſe Man who can govern himſelf both in his Anger, Deſire and Fear.

73. Weeping out of the Fear of God, enlighteneth the Heart, and fortifieth againſt the Return of Sin.

74. Opportunity is ſwift of Flight, ſlow of Return.

75. To make one good Action ſucceed another [conſtantly,] is the Perfection of Goodneſs.

76. Patience in Poverty, with Credit [or a good Reputation,] is better than a plentiful Maintenance with Contempt.

77. A Wiſe Enemy is better than a Fooliſh Friend.

78. A Man's Affliction is the Fore-runner of his Proſperity.

79. Men are more like the Time they live in, than they are like their Fathers.

80. A Man that knoweth the juſt Value of himſelf doth not periſh.

81. The Value of every Man, is the Good which he doth.

82. He that knows himſelf, knows his Lord.

83. A Man is hid under his Tongue.

84. No Praiſe with Pride.

85. No Innocency with Covetouſneſs.

86. No Reſt where there is Envy.

87. It concerns thee more to fly from thy ſelf, than from a Lyon.

88. He that hath no Courage, hath no Religion.

89. A Wiſe Man is never Poor.

90. There is no Generoſity in a Lyar.

91. He that is fearful, will be ſecure at his Journey's End.

92. No Health with Gluttony:

93. No Generoſity of Spirit with a bad Education.

94. A Man governeth his People by doing them good.

95. The Tongue of a Wiſe Man lieth behind his Heart.

96. The Heart of a Fool lieth behind his Tongue.

97. The Complaiſance of a Fool is like a Garden in a Dunghill.

98. Impatience is more irkſome than Patience.

99. He that purſueth that which is not convenient for him, loſeth that which is convenient for him.

100. A Man that is given to Jeſting, will never fail of Hatred nor Contempt.

101. De-

101. Deſpair is a Freeman, Hope is a Slave.[4]

102. The Opinion of a Wiſe Man is Divination, [or an Oracle.]

103. Enmity is Buſineſs enough.

104. A Covetous Man doth not live.

105. His Life is long, whoſe Labour is ſhort.

106. The Purſuit of good Education, is better than the Purſuit of Riches.

107. His Grief is long, whoſe Hope is ſhort.

108. Happy is he that hath no Family.

109. It is better that Kings ſhould be Unjuſt, than Mean-ſpirited.

110. The Thirſt after Wealth, is greater than the Thirſt after Drink.

111. He cheats you, who makes you angry about a Trifle.

112. A Man's Glory from his Virtue, is greater than his Glory from his Pedigree.

113. Your Victory over your Enemy, is your Forbearance.

114. The Freedom of a Man conſiſts in ſpeaking Truth.[5]

115. The Strength of the Heart, is from the Soundneſs of the Faith.

[4] So long as a Man is in Expectation, his Thoughts are in Suſpence, and he is in a ſlaviſh Condition; but as ſoon as he gives over his Purſuit, he is free, and at Liberty.

[5] Not that a Man is obliged to ſpeak every Truth that he knows or believes; but that an Habit of ſpeaking Truth, as it flows from, ſo it naturally ſupports a Generoſity and Fredom of Spirit.

116. The Word of God, is the Medicine of the Heart.

117. Death will rid you of the Faults of the World.

118. There is a Cure for all Enmity, but the Enmity of the Envious Man.

119. Being acquainted with bad Men, is going to Sea.

120. He that holdeth his Peace, doth not repent.

121. He that gives a liſtening Ear to reproach, is one of thoſe that deſerve Reproach.

122. Your being angry, is reproachful before God.

123. The Praiſe of a Man, is under his Tongue.

124. The Converſation of Young Men is deſtructive of Religion.

125. A Learned Converſation is the Garden of Paradiſe.

126. The Deſtruction of a Man is the Vehemency of his Temper.

127. The Forgetfulneſs of Death, is the ruſt of the Heart.

128. The Light of thy Heart is in Prayer in the Darkneſs of the Night.

129. The Greyneſs of thy Head, is the [a] News of thy own Death.

[a] That Word which is here tranſlated News, is uſed in a very particularly Emphatical manner; for it ſignifies the Report of any Perſon's Death.

130. Truſt

130. Truſt in God, is the Believer's Caſtle.

131. Holy Wars [3] are the Pillars of Religion, and the Highways of the Happy: And to thoſe that are engaged in them, the Gates of Heaven ſhall be open.

132. Repentance purifieth the Heart, and waſheth away Sin.

133. Men, or Mankind, is divided into Two Parts or Sorts: The One ſeeketh, and doth not find; Another findeth, and is not contented.

134. The Good Man liveth, though he be tranſlated to the Manſions of the Dead.

135. The Declining from Evil, is better than the Doing Good.

136. Knowledge is the Ornament of the Rich, and the Riches of the Poor.

137. He that omitteth Practice, doth not ſufficiently believe the Reward that is annexed to it.

138. Clemency in Power, is a Defence againſt the Vengeance of God, his Name be Praiſed.

139. The Reverence of God, blotteth out a great many Sins.

140. Reſignation to the Providence of God, makes the greateſt Afflictions eaſy.

141. Quarrelling diſcovereth a Man's Folly, but addeth nothing to the Truth of his Cauſe.

[3] That is, Wars undertaken for the Support of the Religion, i.e. Mahometan.

142. Truth

142. Truth is the Conformity of Speech, to the End for which God ordained it.

143. A Lye is perverting Language from the End for which God ordained it.

144. Adverſity makes no Impreſſion upon a brave Soul.

145. Truſt in God, is a Caſtle of Defence to him that flieth to it.

146. Impatience under Affliction is worſe than the Affliction.

147. That Man hath a brave Soul, who declineth from Things unlawful, and keepeth at a Diſtance from what is criminal.

148. Covetouſneſs is the Head of Poverty, and the Foundation of Wickedneſs.

149. A Deceiver's Tongue is ſweet, and his Heart bitter.

150. Perfection conſiſts in Three Things; Patience in Afflictions; Moderation in our Purſuits; and Aſſiſting him that Aſketh.

151. A Wiſe Man knoweth a Fool, becauſe he hath formerly been ignorant himſelf: but a Fool doth not know a Wiſe Man, becauſe he never was wiſe himſelf.

152. The Believer is always cautious of his Sins: He dreads Temptation, and hopes for the Mercy of his Lord.

153. The Faith (i. e. Religion) is a Tree, the Root of which is firm Aſſurance; the Branch, the the Fear of God; the Flower, [7] Modeſty; and the Fruit, Generoſity of Spirit.

154. Anger is a Fire kindled: He that reſtraineth it, putteth it out; but he that letteth it looſe, is the firſt that is conſumed by it.

155. Folly is an incurable Diſeaſe.

156. They who are Friends in the Moſt High God, their Love remaineth as long as the Cauſe of it: But as for the Friends of this Preſent World, their Love is broken off as ſoon as the Cauſes of it ceaſe.

157. A Fool doth not know what maketh him look little; neither will he hearken to him that adviſeth him.

158. Riches, without God, are the greateſt Poverty and Miſery.

159. Liberality and Fortitude are Noble things; which God, whoſe Name be praiſed, giveth to him whom he loveth and maketh Tryal of.

160. That Man travels the longeſt Journey, that undertakes it in the ſearch of a ſincere Friend.

161. He is the greateſt of all Fools, that doth no Good, and would yet be reſpected; and doth that which is Evil, and yet expecteth the Reward of the Good.

[7] Modeſty is not here to be underſtood in Oppoſition to Unchaſtity; but as it ſignifieth all Decent Behaviour.

162. The

162. The moſt odious of Men to the Moſt High God, is he whoſe Thoughts are fixed upon his Belly and his Luſt.

163. The moſt Happy Man, as to this Life, is he to whom God Moſt High hath given wherewithal to be Content, and a good Wife.

164. He is the moſt Juſt Man, that doth Juſtice upon himſelf, without any one elſe to judge him.

165. That Man beſt deſerveth a Kindneſs, who when he is put off, beareth it patiently; when he is refuſed, excuſeth it; and when he receiveth it, is thankful.

166. The Diligence of the World, is Idleneſs; the Honour of it, Vileneſs; the Height of it Lowneſs.

167. He that walketh upon the [4] Back of the Earth, is going into its Belly.

168. A Believer ſhould be aſhamed, when any Action paſſeth him which his Religion doth not oblige him to do.

169. Juſtice is the Ballance of God, which he hath ſet for Men; wherefore do not contradict him in his Balance, nor oppoſe him in his Dominion.

[4] By the Back of the Earth, he means the Outſide; by the Belly, the Grave.

End of the Sentences.

An Account of the AUTHORS.

Abu Abdollah Mohammed Ben Amer Ebn Waked Alwákidi.

HE is a Celebrated Author amongſt the Arabians, and quoted as Authentick by the Authors that ſucceed him. My Anonymous Author that I found amongſt Dr. Huntington's Manuſcripts, (Num. 495.) ſpeaking concerning one Caab the Son of Malek, ſays, "That Ebn "Alkulli was miſtaken when he ſaid that he "was preſent at the Battle of Beder, and that "he died before the fortieth Year of the Hegi- "rah. Alwákidi (ſaith he) who knew better than "he, ſays that he died in the fiftieth Year."

Again; "Hoſein, the Son of Ali, took his "Journey from Meccah towards Irak with his "Friends and Relations; and was killed on the "tenth Day of Moharram in this Year Sixty "One, for certain: As is confirmed by Alwá- "kidi and others. Some think he was killed in "Saphar of the ſame Year; but the firſt Ac- "count is the right." [1] He wrote a Book which he calls Arriddah, wherein he gives an Account of the Apoſtaſy of the Arabians from Mahome-

[1] Ebn Calechan.

taniſm

taniſm after Mahomet's Deceaſe; and the Wars between Mahomet's Companions and Tuleiha the Son of Choweiled; and Alaſwad Alabbàſi, and Moſeilamah the Falſe Prophet. He was a great Imám or Doctor of the Mahometan Law; and a Cadi or Judge of Bagdàd. He wrote the Conqueſt of Syria. The Conqueſt of Diarbeck. He was a great Favourite of that Learned Emperor Almamoùn. He was born in the Beginning of the [6] One Hundred and Thirty Firſt Year of the Hegirah, and died on the Eleventh of the Month Du'lhagiah, in the Year of the Hegirah [7] Two Hundred and Seven. Being then a Cadi in Bagdàd. In the Weſt part of the Town. Though ſome ſay in the Eaſt. Aged Seventy four Lunar Years.

[8] Abu Jaafar Mohammed Ben Jarir, Ebn Caled Altábari.

THE moſt Celebrated and Authentick Ancient Hiſtorian amongſt the Arabians. He was a great Imàm, or Doctor, in ſeveral Capacities; as Hiſtory, Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Law. Traditions of the Sayings or Facts of MAHOMET, (called by the Arabians Hadìth;) and in the Expoſition of the Alcoran. He wrote ſeveral good Books in different Sciences; all which

[6] Which began Aug. 30. Anno Chriſti 748. [7] Which began May 26. Anno Chriſti 822. [8] Ebn Calecan.

which ſhewed the Extent of his Knowledge, and his Great Excellency. He was born in the [1] Two Hundred and Twenty Fourth Year of the Hegirah and died at Bagdàd on the twenty fifth Day of the Month Shewàl in the Year [2] Three Hundred and Ten. Aged Eighty Four Years.

[3] Abu'l Haſan Ali Ib'n Abil Carem, Mohammed, Ebn Mohammed, Ebn Abdo'l Walid, Aſsheibáni, commonly known by the Name of Ebno'l Athir Aljázari, ſurnamed Ezzoddin.

HE was born in Aljazirah, and brought up there: from whence he removed into Mauſal, with his Father and his two Brethren (who were both very great Men) where he was an Auditor of Abu Fadl; Abdollah the Son of Ahmed; The Thúſian Orator, and ſeveral others, of the ſame Profeſſion. He went ſeveral Times to Bagdàd; both as a Traveller and as an Ambaſſador from the Lord of Mauſal, where he was an Auditor of two famous Sheiks, beſides ſeveral others. From thence he removed into Syria and the Holy Land, where he was an Auditor of ſeveral Perſons of Note. From thence he returned back to Mauſal, where he lived a retired

[1] Which began Nov. 2. Anno Chriſti 838. [2] Which began April 30. A. C. 922. [3] Ebn Calechan.

Life,

Life, ſhut up at home; applying himſelf to Learning, and writing Books. His Houſe was the Place to which all the Learned Men in Mauſal were wont to reſort. He was excellently ſkilled in the [3] Knowledge of the Traditions relating to Mahomet's Perſon, and thoſe Doctrines or Practices that are founded upon them; and thoroughly verſed both in Ancient and Modern Hiſtory. He underſtood perfectly the Ancient Tribes of the Arabians; their Deſcents and Families, and the ſeveral Occurrences amongſt them. He wrote a Book intitled [4] Alcamil, which he begins with the Creation, and brings down to the [5] Six Hundred and Twenty Eighth Year of the Hegirah: It is one of the beſt of Hiſtories. He wrote alſo the Hiſtory of the Companions of Mahomet in ſix large Volumes. He Epitomized Kitàb Alinſàn (the Book of Man) of Abu Said's, and hath corrected a great many of his Miſtakes. That is a very uſeful Book. This Epitome is moſt frequently in uſe, and conſiſts of three Volumes. The Book it ſelf is in Eight, and is very hard to be found. I never ſaw it but once at Aleppo, and in Ægypt there is nothing of it but this Epitome.

[3] Which particular Knowledge, as we have before obſerved, is called by the Arabians Alhadith. [4] i. e. The Univerſal [Hiſtory,] the ſame that we have made uſe of, and always quoted under the Title either of Ebno'l Athir, or Alcámil. [5] Cœpit Nov. 8. A. C. 1230.

When

When I came to Aleppo in the latter end of the [1] Six Hundred and Twenty Sixth Year, this ſame Ezzoddîn was there as a Gueſt with Atthawaſhi Shehab'oddin Togorbel Alchadim Atábek Almélik Alaziz Ebn Almelik Attahir Lord of Aleppo; and I found him a Perſon of extraordinary Merit; abounding with great Perfections, of a generous Temper and great Humility; and I uſed to viſit him frequently; and there was the ſtricteſt Friendſhip between him and Alwaled, (upon whom God have Mercy.) Then he travelled to Damaſcus about the Middle of the [2] Six Hundred and Twenty Seventh Year, and about the Middle of the [3] Six Hundred and Twenty Eighth Year he returned to Aleppo; where I renewed my Acquaintance with him. He did not ſtay there long before he removed to Mauſal. He was born on the fourth of the firſt Jomáda in the Year [4] Five Hundred and Fifty Five. In a Place called the Iſland of the Children of Amer. And he died in the Month Shaaban, in the Year [5] Six Hundred and Thirty, in Mauſal.

[1] Cœpit Nov. 25. A.C. 1228. [2] Cœpit Nov. 19. A.C. 1229. [3] Cœpit Nov. 8. A.C. 1230. [4] Cœpit Jan. 11. A.C. 1160. [5] Cœpit Oct. 17. A.C. 1232.

Abu'lpheda; His whole Title is, Iſmael Ben Ali, Ben Mehmoud, Ben Mohammed; Ben Amer, Shahinſhah, Ben Iyub.

IN the Title-Page of my Manuſcript is written thus. "This Book is collected from ſeveral Hiſtories; the firſt is the Book called "Alcâmil; [3] Kitab Kádi Shemſo'ddin Kitàb "Almodhafferi. Taárich Abi'l Iſa. Tejarobi'l "Omami. Kitab Alyemen. Kitab Alkebruwàn. "Kitàb aldówali. Kitab Ali Ben Muſa. Kitàb "Mufárrihh alkorùb. Kitàb Hàmzah. Kitàb "Hallàt. Kitàb Sepher Kúdâti Beni Iſraël." This laſt is the Book of the Judges of the Children of Iſrael, which, (ſo great was the Diligence and Exactneſs of that Learned Prince;) that becauſe he did not underſtand Hebrew himſelf, he procured a Perſon ſkilled both in Hebrew and Arabick to read it to him.

[4] He is called Sultan, King and Prince of Hamah in Syria, where he reigned after his Brother Ahmed, ſurnamed Almâlek-al Naſſer, who was depoſed in the Year of the Hegirah [5] Seven Hundred and Forty Three. As ſoon as Abu'lphéda began to reign, he took the Title of Almàlec Alſâlehh, but he did not enjoy this Dignity

[3] N. B. Kitàb ſignifies a Book: Taárich, an Hiſtory.
[4] D'Herbelot, in Voce Abou'lpheda. [5] Cœpit Jun. 5. A.C. 1342.

ty above the Space of three Years. Some Hiſtorians ſay, that he was born in the [6] Six Hundred and Seventy Second Year of the Hegirah, and that he died in the Year [7] Seven Hundred and Thirty Two. He is the Author of two Conſiderable Works; the firſt is intitled Tekwim alboldàn; it is a Geography diſpoſed by Tables according to the Order of the Climates with the Degrees of Longitude and Latitude of every Place; there are alſo ſome Notes, but they are not always correct. [8] The ſecond is the Abridgment of Univerſal Hiſtory to his own time, and bears this Title Almokhtaſſer fi akbàr albaſhar. We find Abu'lpheda's Encomium in the Divan of Ebn Notabah intitled Soukalrefìk.

Monſieur D'Herbelot.

A Learned French-man. One of the Greateſt Orientaliſts that ever Europe bred. He, with incredible Application, read over not only all the Arabick, Perſian and Turkiſh Books in the French King's Library, and that of Florence, but ſeveral others that he had purchaſed for his own uſe. He made a compleat Turkiſh and Perſian Dictionary in three large Volumes in Folio, never yet publiſhed. His Famous Biblio-

[6] Cœpit Jul. 17. A. C. 1273. [7] Cœpit Oct. 5. 1331.
[8] That is the ſame which we have made uſe of in this Hiſtory.

theque Orientale, containing a prodigious Treasure of whatsoever is curious or valuable in the Eastern Authors, was published after his Decease in the Year One Thousand Six Hundred and Ninety Seven. It is common in the Hands of the Learned, and therefore I forbear saying any more concerning it.

INDEX.

INDEX.

A

Abbas, the Son of Sahel, circumvents Serjabil, 256. Abdollah, the Son of Abbas, 8. Made Governour of Arabia Fœlix, 10. He diſſwadeth Hoſein in vain from complying with the Invitation of the Irakians, 154.

Abdollah, the Son of Amrou, ſtudieth the Prophet Daniel in Ægypt, 196.

Abdollah, the Son of Hantelah, carries along with him eight of his Sons on an Embaſſay to Yezid, 202.

Abdollah, the Son of Hazim, makes the Meſſenger that brought a Letter to bribe him, eat it, 286.

Abdollah Ben Salem, a Jewiſh Rabbin; his Conjecture concerning Mahomet, 94.

Abdollah, the Son of Zobeir, refuſeth to acknowledge Yezid's Title, 123. Upon Hoſein's Death, he declareth publickly againſt him at Medinah, 195. Is Beſieged in Meccah, 205. Repents himſelf that he did not upon Yezid's Death go into Syria, 207. Is acknowledged Caliph, 218. He Impriſons Mohammed Ben Haniphiyah in the Zemzem, 258. Is terrified by the Hoſeinians at Meccah, 259. His grave Speech to the People upon the occaſion of his Brother Muſab's Death, 278. Is Beſieged in Meccah by Hejage, 285. The couragious Behaviour of his Mother, 288. And himſelf, 291. His Character, 292.

Abdolmélick Proclaimed Caliph, 251. Kills Amrou, the Son of Saïd, 269. Uſes his utmoſt Application to gain the Eaſtern part of the Empire, 271. Takes Poſſeſſion of Cufah, 276. His Reflection upon the Viciſſitude of Human Affairs, 277. His Superſtition, 278, 285, 324. Upon the Death of Abdollah the Son of Zobeir, he becomes entire Maſter of the whole Saracenical Empire, 293. Cauſes the firſt Arabick Money to be Stamped, 305. Dies, 323. His Nick-names, 324. His Dream, ibid.

Abdorrahman, the Son of Melgem, conſpires againſt Ali, 60.

Abdorrahman, the Son of Caled the Great, Poiſoned by Moawiyah's Order, 101, 102.

Abdorrahman raiſes a formidable Power againſt Hejage, 311. Rather than fall into his Hands, he kills himſelf by a Fall from an Houſe, 313.

Abu Hureirah, (that is, Father of the Cat,) one of Mahomet's Companions, a great Traditioniſt, 125.

Abu Jyub is killed before Conſtantinople, 107. His Tomb in great Veneration to this Day, ibid.

Abu'l Mogeirah, put to Death by Ziyàd, 116.

Abu Muſa Aláſhari, 10. Is made one of the Arbitrators between Ali and Moawiyah, 46. Is outwitted by Amrou, 47, 48. Famous for his Harmonious Voice, ibid.

Abu Sophyan, proved to be the Father of Ziyàd, 96.

Adi, the Son of Hathem, ſhot to Death, 253.

Aja, an impregnable Caſtle in Arabia, 161.

Alahnaph, his Prudent, Honeſt and Couragious Anſwer to Moawiyah, 127.

Alaſhtar ſeizes the Caſtle of Cufah by Surprize, 33.

Albochári, the great Collector of the Traditions of Mahomet, 86.

Alchimy ſtudied by Caled the Son of Yezid, 207.

Alhuem, the determination of the Doctors, 22.

Ali, is Proclaimed Caliph, 4. Purſues Ayeſha, Telha and Zobeir, 23. Routs them, 39. Diſcovers a Well by the Spirit of Propheſy, 41. Engages Moawiyah's Forces at Seffein, 42. Leaves his Cauſe to Arbitration, 46. Defeats the Caregites, 52. Is killed, 64. Strange things related of him, 67. His Books, 70.

Ali, Hoſein's Son, anſwereth Yezid out of the Alcoran, 182.

Almochtar makes his Appearance at Cufah, pretending to revenge the Death of Hoſein, 228. Is Impriſoned by by Obeidollah, 234. Is saluted Caliph by a Party, 252. Destroys Hosein's Enemies, particularly Shamer, Amer, Caulah, (or Haulah) and Adi, 252, 253. Endeavours to circumvent Abdollah the Son of Zobeir, 254. Causes a Throne to be carried into the Battel, pretending that there was a Mystical Power in it, and that it was of the same Service as the Ark was to the Children of Israel, 261. He is beaten and killed by Musab, 264.

Almogeirah, the Son of Saïd, 8. Brings Ziyàd into Moawiyah's Interest, 95. His Death, 107.

Almohalleb, Musab's Lieutenant over Persia, 264. Bantered by the Separatists, 280, 281. His Death and Character, 305.

Almundir, one of the Ambassadors from Medinah, gives a bad Character of Yezid, 200.

Alkadarii, a Sect of the Motazeli, 210.

Amer, the Son of Saëd, marches against Hosein, 163. Engages him, 171. And tramples him into the Ground, 177. He is killed by Almochtar, 253.

Ammar Ben Jassar is killed, 43.

Amrou Ebno'l Aas assists Moawiyah, 43. Is made one of the Arbitrators between Ali and Moawiyah, 46. Cajoles Abu Musa, 48. Is Abused by Arwah the Daughter of Hareth, 136. His Character, 93.

Amrou, the Son of Beker, undertakes to Assassinate Amrou Ebno'l Aas, 60. Kills Charijah in the room of him, 62.

Amrou Ben Jarmuz, provoked by Ali, kills himself in a Passion, 38.

Amrou, the Son of Saïd, rebells against Abdol'melick, 266. Is killed, 269. His Wife's Answer to Abdo'lmélick, 270.

Amrou, the Son of Hareth his Conversation with Abdo'lmélick, 277.

Andrew, the Eunuch, causes Sergius to be Castrated, 134.

Anusherwan, surnamed the Just, King of the Persians, 58.

Arafat, a Mountain near Meccah, neceſſary to be viſited in order to the performance of a regular Pilgrimage, 286.

Ark, of the Children of Iſrael, pretended to be imitated by Almochtar, 261.

Arwah, the Daughter of Hareth, her abuſive Language to Amrou Ebno'l Aas, 136.

Ayeſha, Mahomet's youngeſt and beſt beloved Wife, goeth in perſon againſt Ali, 14. She is routed, 38. She reproves Moawiyah for putting Hejer to Death, 107. She dieth, 125. Called Propheteſs and Mother of the Faithful, ib.

Azarakites, ſworn Enemies to all Government, and particularly to the Houſe of Ommiyah, 265. Their Cruelty, 265, 282. They riſe againſt Hejage, but are diſappointed, 295.

B.

Balance, believed by the Mahometans to be appointed by God at the day of Judgment for the weighing of the good and evil Actions of Men, 141.

Barak, the Son of Abdollah, conſpires againſt Moawiyah, 60. Stabs him, 61.

Ben Arthah, one of Moawiyah's Generals, 58. His barbarous Cruelty, and the Vengeance that followed it, 59.

Blind Man hung upon a Gibbet for affronting Obeidollah, 181.

C.

Caled, the Son of Aſid, a Manager for Abdo'lmélick in Baſorah, 272.

Caled, the Son of Yezid, ſkilled in Alchimy, 207. He abuſeth Merwan the Son of Hakem, 249.

Caregites, or Karegites, Separatiſts, revolt againſt Ali, 50. Are defeated, 52.

Children, named Salem out of reſpect to the Name of Salem the Son of Ziyad, 222.

Coin, when firſt ſtamped by the Arabians, 305.

Copy

Copy of the Alcoran, written at the Command of Othman the Caliph, 101. Seen by one of our Authors, ibid.

Cufians, they assist Ali, 33. They invite Hosein to come and take the Government upon him, 144. Their Character, 82.

Curse amongst the Arabians: May your Mother be Childless of you, 159.

D.

Dehâc, the Son of Kais, a Favourer of Abdollah the Son of Zobeir, 217. Is killed, 221.

Dream, of Abdo'lmélick, 324. Of Hejage, 285. Of the Mother of Shebib, 310.

Dust thrown at Ziyâd, 113. At Obeidollah, 120.

E.

Eclipse of the Sun, upon the attempting to remove Mahomet's Pulpit, 110.

F.

Fatemah, see Phatemah.

G.

Greeks make an Incursion into Syria, 271.

H.

Hagi's, reverenced amongst the Mahometans, 28.

Hakem obeys the Text of the Alcoran in Opposition to Ziyâd's command, 100. His remarkable Death, ibid.

Hani, a favourer of Hosein, 148. Is beheaded, 154.

Harro meets with Hosein and intercepts him, 158. He repents, and joyns with him, 170.

Hasan, eldest Son of Ali, taxeth his Father's Conduct, 23. Succeeds his Father, 75. Resigns to Moawiyah, 79. His Character, 81, 85, 87. And Death, 83.

Hatred between the Families of Ommiyah and Abbas implacable, 189.

Haula carries Hosein's Head to Obeidollah, 177. Is killed by Almochtar, 252.

Heads, the Respect paid to the Heads of Friends is Washing, Embalming, wrapping up in clean Linnen, and decent Burial, 286.

Hejage, the Son of Joseph, an Eloquent and Warlike Captain, sent against Abdollah the Son of Zobeir, 284. He besieges him in Meccah, 285. Pulls down the Temple of Meccah and rebuilt it, 293. His Cruelty, ibid. He builds Waset, 313. His Character, 314, & seq. His Death, 322.

Hejer, his Character and Behaviour, 102. His Death, 106.

Hosein, Ali's second Son, 66. Refuseth to acknowledge Yezid's Title, 123. Is invited by the Cufians, 144. And complies, 154. Is intercepted by Harro, 158. And engaged by Shamer and Amer, 171. He is killed, 176. And trampled into the ground, 177. A Light streams up over his Head all the Night, and white Birds hover over it, 177. His Tomb, 186. Worketh a Miracle, 187. His Titles, ib. Devotions and Pilgrimages, 188. His answer to his Father Ali concerning the Divine Love, ib. Superstitious Observation of the Day of his Death, 189. Lamentation of the Penitents at his Tomb, 245.

Hosein Waes, a Paraphrast upon the Alcoran, 73, 236.

Hoseinians, (that is the Partisans of Hosein) go to Meccah and terrify Abdollah the Son of Zobeir, 257.

Hozein besieges Meccah, 205.

I.

Jabalah, the Son of Ayham, last King of the Christian Arabs, dies, 118.

Ibrahim, the Son of Alashtar, his fidelity to Musaab, 272.

Irakians, influenced by Abdolmélick betray Musáb the Son of Zobeir, 274. They rebell against Hejage and are beaten, 295.

John, the Son of Saïd, attempts to rescue his Brother Amrou, 269. His bold answer to Abdolmélick, 276.

Jowàb, 16.

St. John Baptist, reverenced by the Mahometans, 236 Their Tradition concerning him, 237.

Isa, the Son of Musáb, his singular Courage and Duty towards his Father, 274.

K.

Kairwan built, 108.
Kaiſians, why ſo called, 220. They are beaten, 221.
Kerbelah, the Place where Hoſein was killed, 186.

L.

Laanahullah, ſignifies in Arabick, the Curſe of God be upon him, 209.
Letter, eaten by the Meſſenger that brought it, 286.
Light, ſtreaming from Hoſein's Head all night, 177.
LOVE, the powerful Effects of it, 132.

M.

MAHOMET, he is born in the Reign of Anuſherwan the JUST King, 58. Spits in Haſan's Mouth, and names him, 84. His Fondneſs of Haſan and Hoſein, ibid. His Character of Amrou Ebno'l Aas, 93. His Prophecy concerning the Duration of the Caliphate, 85. His Deciſion in the Caſe of Fornication, 97. His Indulgence to the Army that ſhould take Conſtantinople, 107. His Walking Stick and Pulpit, 109. His Sentence upon him that ſhould injure Medinah, 209.
Mahometans, under a Vow, obliged to abſtain from Women, perfumed Ointments, and not permitted to come near the Temple of Meccah, 285.
Mahomet, Son of Abubecr, made Lieutenant of Ægypt, 54. Is killed, 56.
Mahomet, the Son of Hanaphiyah, chief of Ali's Family, 228. His Piety, 257, 260. He and his Friends are ſeized by Abdollah the Son of Zobeir, and impriſoned in the Zemzem. Dies, 310.
Meccah, beſieged by Hozein, 205. The Siege raiſed upon the News of the Death of Yezid, 206.
Medinah, taken by Meſlem, 204.
Medinians, their particular manner of depoſing Yezid, 202.
Mekſourah, a ſort of a Deſk firſt introduced into the Moſque by Moawiyah, 135.

Merwan, the Son of Hakem, kills Telha, 36. Is made Governour of Medinah, 118. Proclaimed Caliph at Damascus, 220. Marries Yezid's Widow, 221. She stifles him, 250. Called Ebn Tarid, and why, ibid.

Meslem sent by Yezid to besiege Medinah, 203.

Moawiyah, Othman's Lieutenant in Syria, 4. Encounters Ali at Seffein, 42. Leaves his Cause to Arbitration, 46. Is wounded, 61. Obligeth Hasan to Abdicate, 79. And is proclaimed Caliph, 90. Owns Ziyàd to be his Brother, 95. Designs to remove Mahomet's Pulpit from Medinah, 109. His perfidious Dealing between Saëd the Governour of Medinah and Merwan the Son of Hakem, 118. He establisheth his Son Yezid in the Succession of the Government, 122. His Last Speech, 128. And Character, seq. Objections made against him by Hasan the Basorian, 131.

Moawiyah II. Proclaimed Caliph, 210. Resigns the Government, 212. Dies, ib.

Money, when first Coined amongst the Arabians, 305.

Motazeli, a Sect amongst the Arabians; whence denominated, 9.

Mother of Abdollah, the Son of Zobeir, Her Courage, 288.

Mother of the Faithful, one of the Titles of Ayesha, Mahomet's Wife, 125.

May your Mother be Childless of you. A common Curse amongst the Arabians, 159.

Mother of Shebib, Her Dream, 310.

Muezzin, calls the People to Prayers, 268.

Murder, accidentally prevented by a Maid Servant, 148.

Musáb, Brother to Abdollah, the Son of Zobeir, is routed, 222. Is made Governour of Basorah, 262. He marcheth against Almochtar, 264. He irritates the Basorians, 272. Is killed, 275.

Muslim, Hosein's Cousin, goes into Irák, to make interest for him; he attacks the Castle of Cufah, 150. Is deserted, ib. Taken and killed, 154.

Musriph, signifies in Arabick, Extravagant, Exorbitant.

N.

Najári, a Tribe of the Arabians, 214.
Nochailah, the Place of Rendezvous for Ali's Party, 222.
Nóomàn the Son of Bashir's Speech for which he is deposed from the Lieutenancy of Cufah, 146. He conducts the Ladies from Damascus to Medinah, and refuseth their Present of Jewels, 185. He is sent by Yezid to compose the Tumults at Medinah, 201.

O.

Obeidollah, the Son of Ziyàd, made Lieutenant of Chorasan, 120, and of Cufah, 146. Treats Hosein's Head contumeliously, 178. By an Insurrection of the Cufians and Basorians against him, he is forced to retire into Syria, 214. Cuts Solyman and his Penitents all to Pieces, 248. Marches against Cufah, 261. Is beaten and killed, ibid.
Okail, Ali's Brother, deserts to Moawiyah, 60.
Okbah punisheth the Revolters from Mahometanism, 108.
Othman, the Son of Haniph, 10.
Ottoman Emperors have their Swords girt on at the Tomb of Abu Iyub, 107.

P.

Penitents, why so called, 241. Their Lamentation at Hosein's Tomb, 246.
Phatemah, Mahomet's Daughter, and Wife of Ali, 1.
Phatemah persuades her Sister Zeinab to give the Guide their Jewels, 185.
Phatemite Caliphs in Ægypt, pretended to be descended from Phatemah the Daughter of Mahomet; their Descent not allowed by the Learned, 186.
Prayer of Hosein, 161, 174, ibid. 246. and his Penitents, ib. Said at Almochtar's Ark, 261.
Propheteſs, the Title of Ayesha, Mahomet's Wife, 107.
Pulpit of MAHOMET, reverenced by the Mahometans, 109. The Sun Eclipsed upon Moawiyah's Attempt to remove it, 110.

R.

Rahyah, said by MAHOMET to resemble the Angel Gabriel, 109.

Rûz Hoſein (the Day of Hoſein) ſo the Day whereon Hoſein was killed, is called by the Perſians, 189.

S.

Sacrifice, either of Camels or Oxen, a ſolemn Rite amongſt the Mahometans, on the tenth Day of the Month Moharram, 286.

Saëd Ebn Zend, one of thoſe ten that had a poſitive Promiſe of Paradiſe, 109.

Saëd, Governour of Medinah, his generous Behaviour towards Merwan the Son of Hakem, 118.

Saed, Othman's Grandſon made Lieutenant of Chorasan; goes to Samarcand, 121.

Safrians, a Sect amongſt the Mahometans, of which we have not met with a particular Account, 296.

Sahel, Ali's Lieutenant, ſent back by the Syrians, 10.

Salehh, a Caregite, joyned with Shebib, 296. His Sermon, ibid. Is killed, 304.

Salem, the Son of Ziyâd, invades the Turks in Sogd, 194. Choſen Governour of Chorasan, 222. How well beloved, ib.

Samrah, Ziyâd's Lieutenant over Baſorah, 113. He curſeth Moawiyah, 119.

Seffein, The Field of Battel between Ali and Moawiyah, 42.

Separatiſts carry Othman's Bloody Shirt into Syria, 11. They deſert Abdollah the Son of Zobeir, 230. Are beaten from Baſorah, 233. Banter Almohalleb upon the Subject of the Oath of Allegiance, 280, 281.

Sergius, Caſtrated by the Procurement of Andrew the Eunuch, 134.

Serjabil, the Son of Wars, circumvented by Abbás the Son of Sahel, 256.

Seyyid, (the Lord) one of Hoſein's Titles, 187.

Shahid, (the Martyr) one of the Titles of Hoſein, 187.

Shamer begins the Battle with Hoſein, 171. He is killed by Almochtar, 252.

Shebet makes an odd Appearance at Baſorah, 263.

Shebib, a Caregite, oppoſes Hejage, 296. His Death, 309. His Mother's Dream concerning him, 310.

Shij, the Sect of Ali, 73.
Society, the Companions of Mahomet, called so by way of Eminence, 126.
Sogd, conquered by the Mahometans, 122.
Solyman, the Son of Sorad, headeth a Party of the Sectaries of Ali, 223. His circular Letter, 224. He sets out against Obeidollah, 243. His Lamentation at Hosein's Tomb, 246. Is killed, 248.
Somyah, Mother of Ziyàd, 96.
Sonnites, Those Mahometans that follow the Tradition, 73.
Sun Eclipsed, upon the attempting to remove Mahomet's Pulpit, 110.
Superstitious Observation of the Day of Hosein's Death, 189.

T.

Tarmud, surrendered to the Mahometans, 122.
Tehamah, a Province of Arabia, the Inhabitants whereof looked upon a great Storm as a certain Presage of Victory, 287.
Telhá, an Enemy of Ali's is killed, 36.
Temple of Meccah burnt, 206.
Thirmahh, (or Thirrimohh) invites Hosein to the Castle of Aja, 161.
Tomb of Abu Iyub in great Veneration, 107.
Tomb of Hosein worketh a Miracle, 187.
Turkish Queen loses her Buskin, 120.

W.

Walking Stick of Mahomet, 109.
Waset, built by Hejage, 313.
White Birds hover over Hosein's Head, 177.

Y.

Yali, plunders the Treasury, 10.
Yaum Hosein, The Day of Hosein; the Day on which Hosein was killed, 189.
Yezdi, Author of a Treatise concerning Divine Love, 188.
Yezid, the Son of Ares, his great Presence of Mind at the Minute of Death, 261.

Yezid, the Son of Moawiyah, goes to beſiege Conſtantinople, 107. He is owned his Father's Succeſſor by the Provinces, 126. Succeeds him, 138. He bewaileth the Death of Hoſein, and entertaineth the Women courteouſly, 181, 182. Sends a Silver Collar to put about Abdollah the Son of Zobeir's Neck, 196. The Ambaſſadors from Medinah give him a bad Character, 200. He ſends an Army to beſiege Medinah, 204. Dies, 207. His Character, ibid & ſeq. The Opinion of the Mahometan Doctors concerning him, 208.

Z.

Zeid, the Son of Arkom, rebukes Obeidollah for ſtriking Hoſein's Head over the Mouth, 178.

Zeid, the Son of Sauchan, 31.

Zeid, the Son of Thabet his ſingular Learning and Modeſty, 101. Writes a fair Copy of the Alcoran (ſeen by one of my Authors) at the Command of Othman the Caliph, ib.

Zeinab, Ali's Siſter, confronts Obeidollah, 178. And Yezid, 183. She, at the Requeſt of her Siſter Phatemah, preſents their Guide with both their Jewels, 185.

Zemzem, a Pit at Meccah, which the Arabians affirm to be the ſame that the Angel ſhewed to Hagar and Iſhmael, Gen. XXI. 19. 258.

Zentil, King of the Turks, threatned by Hejage, is obliged to deliver up his Enemy Abdorrahman, 313.

Ziyad the Son of Hantelah, eſpouſeth the Cauſe of Ali, 22.

Ziyàd, the Son of Somyah, made Lieutenant of Baſorah, 56. His Juſtice, 58. Is owned by Moawiyah for his Brother, 95. His exemplary Severity, 98. Admirable Eloquence, 99. His Lieutenancies, ibid. He is affronted by Hejer, 103.

Zobeir, (or Azzobeir) Ali's Enemy, 1. Is killed, 38.

FINIS.